Cabinet Topples As Austria Acts To Meet Crisis

Fey Is Ushered Out as Schuschnigg Forms New Ministry.

Starhemberg Gets New Broad Powers

Private Armies United in Shake-up; Vienna Is Tense.

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Vienna, Oct. 17.—Austria suddenly revamped its government in an atmosphere of bristling bayonets tonight, putting to an end its system of competing private armies.

As heavily armed police guarded public buildings, Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg and his cabinet resigned; President Miklas ordered Schuschnigg to form a new government and, within a few minutes, changes of far-reaching character were effected.

Schuschnigg remains as chancellor and the militant prince Ernst von Starhemberg, leader of the Heimwehr and Fatherland front, retains the post of vice chancellor.

Power for Starhemberg.

But Maj. Emil Fey, stanch aid of the slain Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss, was ushered out of the cabinet with the minister of agriculture, Josef Reither, a Catholic Monarchist leader revered by thousands of peasants.

The powerful Starhemberg was given vastly increased authority. He was made head of a new Austrian militia, to be formed of the private armies which heretofore have been a powerful factor in Austrian military organization.

This militia will include Starhemberg's old Heimwehr of nearly 100,000 men; approximately 60,000 Catholic Storm Troops and 15,000 men of the Freiheitsbund.

Officials, after the sweeping cabinet changes, said there would be no alteration in Austria's foreign policy.

The nation, it was said, remains estranged from Germany and determined not to participate in League of Nations sanctions against Italy.

Complications Feared.

But possibilities of internal complications were seen in many quarters.

Starhemberg's influence in internal affairs of the nation was increased tremendously. In a radio address tonight he declared:

"I am the sole leader of the new militia. Whosoever does not maintain discipline will be dismissed. I know my goal. I require unqualified loyalty. I am the only leader of the auxiliary armed forces."

Fey, Vienna Heimwehr leader who has a great following in the capital, once was vice chancellor and of late has been minister of the interior.

It was he who was imprisoned for hours by Nazis who assassinated the fiery little Dollfuss more than a year ago.

Fey showed every evidence of anger as he left the Ballhausplatz after the changes had been determined, and Austria tonight was asking itself: "Will Fey take it without a protest?"

In informed quarters it was stated there had been increasing tension between Starhemberg and Fey of late. Tonight's cabinet decision settled that issue, but there was still the question of whether the Vienna Heimwehr would admit it settled.

Blow to Monarchists.

Starhemberg's accession to leadership of all the private armies was approved by Schuschnigg and by the smaller Freiheitsbund, which, although not so important, is in sympathy with Schuschnigg's Catholic Storm Troops.

Many interpreted the shift as an unfavorable turn of events for the monarchists, who would put the Hapsburg Archduke Otto back on the throne.

Fey was favorably inclined to the monarchist movement; Reither was active in the campaign for restoration.

Vienna was aquiver with rumors. Emergency squadrons of police and detachments of the regular army patrolled the streets.

One officer said the reason for the extraordinary precautions was a report that Communists were planning disorders.

As for Fey, some observers attached significance to the fact he was in the chancellory when Dollfuss was slain on July 25, 1934. Another official, Karl Karwishky, undersecretary of justice, who was with Fey at that time, also was dismissed today.

Fey, however, was not associated at that time with the Nazi Putschists who killed Dollfuss.

Despite Fey's removal, the Heimwehr apparently gained strength in the new government. Fey's successor, Eduard Barr-Barensel, was a provincial governor and Heimwehr leader in lower Austria.

The Heimwehr also captured the important finance ministry, which went to Ludwig Draxler, and eliminated an old foe with the dismissal of Reither.

New Clews Hint Gambler Hired Wilson Killers

'Big Shot,' Now in Jail, Imported Gunmen, Is Theory of Police.

A big-shot Washington gambling operator was trembling last night as police sought evidence to prove that he had hired gunmen to kill Edward (Mickey) McDonald. The gunmen shot and killed Allen B. Wilson, newspaper route agent, by mistake.

With evidence already gathered against the four suspected slayers, detectives now want to get the goods on the man who wanted McDonald put away. They know him. He is one of the city's most powerful gamblers.

The story of the planning of McDonald's death, police say, is this:

McDonald, a small-time sportsman, formerly was connected with more powerful gambling figures in the District. Before the shooting he branched out on his own, and incurred the enmity of his former connections as his activities cut into their business.

Finally it was decided McDonald should be killed. The men selected to do the job were Robert Mais and Walter Legenza, electrocuted in Richmond several months ago for the murder of a Federal Reserve bank truck driver. Higher-ups gave Albert Sutton $10,000 to make arrangements. Sutton is now in cus-

Nonunion Labor Hired In Texas Dock Strike

Houston, Tex., Oct. 17 ½.—Steamship operators at Galveston prepared today to put nonunion longshoremen to work before the end of the week. The International Longshoremen's Association has been on strike for a week in Texas ports and at Lake Charles, La.

In advertisements today in Galveston newspapers, steamship men offered 85 cents an hour for longshoremen labor, the wage requested by the International Longshoremen's Association. Workers were told to apply at Pier 26, where arrangements have been made to fed and quarter them under heavy guard. Galveston city commissioners issued special police commissions to 24 men on application of Joe B. Brooks, superintendent of the Galveston Wharf Co. police.

2 Race Horses Are Drugged In Maryland

Deduce and Silent Shot Victims at Laurel; Race Canceled.

Commission Promises a Thorough Investigation of Incident.

By the Associated Press.

Laurel, Md., Oct. 17.—Deduce and Silent Shot, favorites in the fifth race here, were drugged in their stalls early today and the Maryland Racing Commission launched an immediate examination.

Neither horse appeared to have suffered ill effects from the tampering. Blisters that could have been caused by poison were found in Silent Shot's mouth. On the floor of Deduce's stall was a capsule the animal apparently had expelled.

Only four horses were entered in the race, a $1,000 claiming event for 3-year-olds. A distance race for 2-year-olds was substituted by Racing Secretary John Purcell Turner, sr., after the fifth had been canceled.

Orders Investigation.

Jervis Spencer, chairman of the racing commission, said in Baltimore the commission would "do everything in its power" to "run down" the guilty person.

Spencer said he had ordered a chemical analysis of the powder found in Deduce's stall. Turner said the drug apparently was chloral hydrate, a sedative that would have made the animals listless at post time.

A police guard was thrown around the stalls after the drugging was discovered early today. The only clew available was the report of a watchman he saw a man run from the stables just before dawn and jump into an automobile.

Boards Ripped.

Two boards were ripped from the barn housing the horses. The intruder had to make a drop of 7 feet to reach the floor. The alarm was given by an Audley Farms foreman who saw the unidentified man at work.

Fred Kraft, Deduce's trainer, found a white substance in the animal's mouth and discovered a capsule on the floor of the stall.

Shortly afterward, Frank Garrett, trainer of Silent Shot, discovered his charge had been tampered with. Outwardly, the horse did not appear to have been drugged, but his mouth was blistered and it was feared he swallowed a capsule.

Deduce and Silent Shot are well known on Maryland tracks. Deduce, 6-year-old gelded son of Luculite and Decree, is owned by Mrs. H. L. Ughetta. John E. Hughes owns Silent Shot, 5-year-old gelded chestnut son of Under Fire and Silencia.

112 Killed, 407 Hurt In Soviet Earthquake

Stalin-Abad, U. S. S. R., Oct. 17 (U.P.).—At least 112 persons were killed and 407 injured today in the Tivol-Dora district of Tadjinkistan by the second earthquake to strike there within a week.

Airplanes from Stalin-Abad tonight rushed food and clothing to the quake victims. A government commission announced plans to transfer the inhabitants of the stricken mountain villages to the valleys.

2 Killed as Seaplane Dives Into L. I. Sound

New York, Oct. 17 (AP).—Two men were killed instantly late today when their amphibian plane developed trouble and fell into Manhasset Bay, Long Island Sound, near the Port Washington seaplane port from which it took-off a few minutes earlier. The men were the pilot, Harry Freedman, about 35, whose offices are at 270 Madison avenue, and James MacDonald, about 48, operator of a barge at Port Washington.

Official Whips Judy O'Grady By a Nose in Laurel Thriller

By Walter Haight,
A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel Race Track, Md., Oct. 17. With the cancellation of the feature race here this afternoon, chief interest centered in the running of the Crisfield, a test of a mile and 70 yards, and it is doubtful if the original top event could have produced so thrilling a finish. Official, representing the Shandon Farm, and Judy O'Grady, wearing the colors of Walter M. Jeffords, staged a stretch battle that quickened the pulse of every true race fan.

On even terms at the eighth pole, the colt and filly, with their riders using hands, elbows, knees and heels, in an effort to get a split second more in speed, fought it out right down to the wire with Official taking the decision by a nose—the closest margin in the turf vocabulary.

Some say Jockey Richards, on Official, outrode Jockey Rosengarten, on Judy O'Grady, but none could ask any more of either jockey or horse. They were what the horsemen call "all out" at the finish of a real horse race.

It was the third choice against the favorite in the duel and Official paid an $11 mutuel. Two lengths behind the first-place struggle came Cross Ruff, with four others confining their efforts to the "also ran" division.

Much hard running by both horses preceded their clash in the stretch. Judy O'Grady worked her way to the front on the back stretch and ran Last Boat into defeat. Official was in the second flight for 6 furlongs before being

Lawyers' Fists Fly At Nixon Mistrial

Name-Calling Leads to Blows Between Sheehy and Gardiner.

"You're a so-and-so, Mr. Sheehy!"

"You're another, Mr. Gardiner"

And the battling barristers biffed their way to a "no decision" in one of the most thrilling courtroom slugfests of recent years.

It was yesterday in District Supreme Court. The now famous Nixon vs. Nixon divorce hearing had ended suddenly in a mistrial. Attorney W. Gwynn Gardiner, former District Commissioner and counsel for Mrs. Annette Pauline Nixon, approached Attorney Vincent A. Sheehy, jr., attorney for Capt. Thomas Hay Nixon, U. S. A.

Sheehy stood just beyond the swinging gate in front of Justice Jesse Adkins' bench. The justice had retired. The courtroom was crowded with spectators, lawyers and newspapermen.

"Wait a minute," ordered gray-haired, bespectacled Attorney Gardiner.

"Don't order me around," retorted slender, middle-age Attorney Sheehy.

War clouds gathered, but Gardiner seemed to be smiling. Onlookers retreated to a respectful distance. The two lawyers exchanged pleasantries—a few heated and slightly unprintable words.

"Ask me politely and I might stay," flared Sheehy.

Gardiner bent double in a sweeping bow. His face beamed with mock seriousness.

"Please, Mr. Sheehy, will you stay?" he boomed.

(Explanatory note—A few moments before the feverish flare-up, Justice Adkins had declared the Nixon case a mistrial when Gardiner filed an amendment to his original bill, naming Mrs. Anna Cooke Nixon, the Army officer's present wife, as co-respondent. Gardiner had stopped Sheehy to serve him notice of the supplemental bill.)

Gardiner's gracious bow and honeyed words passed over Sheehy's head. Spectators retired to a still safer distance. They argued for an instant, and Sheehy started through the swinging gate. He waved a brief case in one hand. Gardiner grabbed the lawyer's free hand, doubled his fists, and "brought one up from the floor." The blow

Berry Denies Plan to Revive The Blue Eagle

Says Question Will Be Left Up to Business at Meeting Here.

Denying any plan to revive NRA, Maj. George L. Berry, the President's co-ordinator for industrial co-operation, nevertheless yesterday raised the question "whether voluntary trade associations and voluntary codes will be strong enough to drive cut-throat competition and the sweatshop operator from the business scene without legal authority help."

This question, he said, can best be answered by industrial leaders themselves. He said it would be the "paramount question" facing next month's round table discussions with business chieftains in Washington.

Maj. Berry's statement was prompted by remarks of James A. Emery, general counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers, before the American Institute of Steel Construction, yesterday at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.

Emery urged business men to lean upon their respective trade associations, working co-operatively with the Federal Trade Commission, for the establishment of fair competitive practices, rather than embrace any plan to revive the NRA.

Meanwhile, the American Federation of Labor meeting in Atlantic City yesterday voted for revival of abandoned industrial codes, deploring "feeble attempts * * * made by a few industries to submit trade agreements designed to take the place of the codes under the NRA, but which in reality are a mere sham and without any social significance."

Coincidentally, Walton H. Hamilton, the President's adviser on consumer problems, in the first issue of The Consumer, official publication of the NRA consumers' division, raised the questions, "What power has Congress over industries? How far can it go? What methods may it employ?"

Hamilton said the answers "must await further congressional action and further news from the judicial front."

At the same time he suggested four possible alternatives.

They were:

"1. Nothing will be done, and

Deny D. C. Suicide Is Kin of Actress

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Oct. 17.—Ethel Davies, sister of Marion Davies, the motion-picture star, said today she did not know of an "Ethel Davies," of Washington, who committed suicide in Brooklyn on October 12.

New York police had made an inquiry as to the possible relationship of the dead woman to the motion-picture star after receipts at the Brooklyn Y. W. C. A. of an anonymous letter saying she was a sister of the actress.

The woman, who had registered as Ethel Davies, of Washington, died of poison. No relatives have been located.

Bolton, Sibley Oppose Borah On 1936 Issue

Republican Rift Widens as East Insists on War on 'Spending.'

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Further evidence came yesterday that the Eastern wing of the Republican Party is determined to make New Deal "spending" the major issue of next year's presidential campaign, thus widening the schism which has developed in that party if the Western progressives adhere to their previous stand.

In addition to Theodore Roosevelt's reply to Senator William E. Borah (Republican), Idaho, contending that Democratic "extravagance and waste" should be emphasized, Representative Chester C. Bolton, chairman of the Republican congressional campaign committee, has taken that stand.

Indeed, the Eastern Republican leaders may well believe they are on sound ground in taking that position because during the last week the steadily mounting Federal deficit and the danger inherent in it to the Nation's economic structure has been stressed in speeches in half a dozen important quarters.

Harper Sibley, chairman of the United States Chamber of Commerce, speaking yesterday at the annual centenary luncheon of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, contended that business cannot look with equanimity on the "stupendous volume of public expenditures, which unless the national income is enlarged proportionately, must inevitably result in an excessive rate of taxation."

He pointed out that since the opening session of the Seventy-third Congress—two and a half years ago—there has been made available for public spending $26,000,000,000, with an increase in the national indebtedness already of $9,500,000,000.

"That course, if long followed, can lead only to disaster—either inflation or repudiation," Sibley declared, adding that an immediate effect of the "spending" program has been to retard business by the uncertainty of future excessive taxation.

Speaking in the same city last night under the auspices of the Sentinels of the Republic, Robert R. McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Tribune, one of the foremost Republican newspapers in the country, also assailed Federal "spending," while laying the em-

Sanctions Ordered Already in the Suez

Naples, Oct. 17 (AP).—Economic sanctions already have begun in the Suez Canal Zone, sources close to the military port reported tonight.

Numerous ships which, before the week closes, will have sailed with over 16,000 troops to join the Italian East African army, were instructed to stock up with fuel and supplies for the round trip. This, it was said, was necessary because Italian ships have experienced difficulty in obtaining supplies in the Suez, and it was thought sources there might be cut off entirely at any time.

Two ships thus forewarned, the Saturnia and Romolo, sailed tonight with 4,781 troops and officers.

Britain Sifts Story Italians Slew Somalis

Incident on Ethiopian Border Adds to Strain Between 2 Nations.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Djibouti, French Somaliland, Oct. 17.—The government of British Somaliland, which adjoins this French colony to the east, today investigated reports that Italian attacks on Ehtiopians in Ogaden has resulted in the killing of British subjects and decimation of their herds by poison gas.

It was believed the reports were true, but that the death and damage in British territory were accidental. While the incident has strained Italo-British relations, additionally it apparently will be settled peaceably.

The reports state the advancing Italians have killed a number of British Somalilanders, including soldiers of the Camel Corps (frontier guard) and that poison gas and machine-gun fire have wiped out herds of British-owned livestock.

British Vice Consul E. C. Lowe received the reports from Zeil, on the British Somaliland coast. He immediately reported to his superiors, who ordered official report from the commander of the Camel Corps and the commissioner for the region.

The district where the British losses occurred is inhabited by British Warsengali tribesmen, who are nomads and own large herds of cattle and goats.

Neither the Italian nor Ethiopian consuls had any information about the incident. They said, however, that the border between British Somaliland and Ethiopia is poorly defined and that advancing Italian troops easily might have invaded territory inhabited by British subject tribes without knowing it. The Italians also might have mistaken the British Camel Corps troops, who are natives, for Ethiopians. Gas attacks launched by the Italians naturally will kill any herds in the area covered.

The Italian consul denied any gas was being used by Gen. Rudolpho Graziani's troops and added that Graziani has been instructed to use every precaution against invading British territory or antagonizing Britain in any way. If British subjects have been killed and their property damaged, indemnities will be paid.

Aim at Caravan Routes

Rome, Oct. 17 (U.P.).—Italian correspondents today reported that a column of Gen. Rodolpho Graziani's forces advancing toward Jijiga is fighting its way forward along the frontier of British Somaliland in an effort to occupy the caravan routes and cut off military supplies the Ethiopian defenders on the Ogaden front are receiving from British territory.

Since lifting of the arms embargo against Ethiopia a steady stream of military supplies has been flowing into Ogaden from British Somaliland ports.

Sunny, Warm Today; Rain, Maybe, Tonight

A balmy day, with clear skies and a maximum temperature of about 75, was predicted for the District today by the Weather Bureau.

Late this afternoon may be cloudy, with possible rain tonight, the forecaster said.

The temperature mounted steadily yesterday, reaching a maximum of 67 at 4 p. m. as topcoats were put away for 24 hours at least.

Mexican Rebels Gain Recruits, Spread Fear With U. S. Arms

By the Associated Press.

Nogales, Mexico, Oct. 17.—Alarm spread through this border region tonight with reports that Mexican rebel raiders were gaining recruits, receiving ammunition from the United States and concentrating in the Altar area, 50 miles southwest of here.

Three Mexican fighting planes, armed with machine guns, left Nogales this morning to scout the Altar district in search of raiders who have killed at least nine persons in their uprising against the Sonora government.

How the rebels obtained ammunition from across the border remained a mystery to federau authorities here. It was reported that much ammunition had been brought from Arizona by agents of the raiders.

A large shipment was reported to have passed through Sasabe, Ariz., last Tuesday.

Numerous terrified residents of Naco, near the international line, were reported to have fled into Arizona last night because of fears of an attack.

Guards kept watch in Naco and Agua Prieta. Automobile travel at night betwen Naco and Cananea was prohibited. The Naco telegraph office was kept open all night so that officials might keep informed.

Further assuring word that five prominent Americans on a Sonora hunting expedition had not been molested by the raiders was given today at Douglas, Ariz., by Jack Francis, a mining engineer.

Francis said he had just returned from the ranch where the quintet was hunting and that they had not been disturbed. Border reports a few days ago said raiders had robbed the hunters of their arms and ammunition.

Definite Reply to Bid for Naval Assistance Is Demanded.

Premier Pleads Sunday Elections

Indicates a Favorable Answer Will Be Forthcoming Monday.

The Crisis Abroad.

Great Britain asked France to choose between her friendship or Italy's in a request for an immediate answer regarding use of French naval bases if the British fleet clashes with Italy's. Laval is expected to reply favorably on Monday.

An unconfirmed report from Zeila, British Somaliland, said Italians have killed British native subjects and their herds in the Ogaden drive.

One hundred thousand Ethiopian warriors, after a wild demonstration before Emperor Haile Selassie, left for the front. An Ethiopian communique reported renewed bombing by the Italians. Ethiopian officials also declared that the Italian colonial leader, Gen. Emilio de Bono, had offered to resign after a dispute with Mussolini.

More than 7,000,000 rifle cartridges were reported by shippers in transit to the Ethiopian southern armies from British Somaliland. Haile Selassie Gugsa, who deserted to the Italians, was made Ras of the Tigre Province by Italy.

In Geneva, France left no doubt as to her position on sanctions by announcing she is ready to ship arms to Ethiopia and refuse them to Italy.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Paris, Oct. 17.—France must make a definite choice between the friendship of Great Britain or Italy, British sources said today.

The British refuse any longer to tolerate Premier Pierre Laval's attempt to ride two horses. British Ambassador Sir George Clerk has asked Laval for a "yes or no" answer to the question:

"Will France allow the British navy to use her Mediterranean naval bases if Italy makes an unprovoked attack upon British ships?"

British sources tonight said that if the French reply were negative it "is only a question of time before the British government follows Adolf Hitler's example and quits the League."

Laval, harassed by international and domestic problems, is reported to have indicated his answer will be favorable but must await the senatorial elections Sunday. As soon as the government has passed the test, Laval is expected to confer with his council of ministers on a reply. It may be handed to Sir George Monday.

British Press for Reply.

The British are pressing for a definite and speedy answer and believe they should get it in view of the "reasonableness" of their demand. Under the League Covenant they would be justified in demanding complete collaboration of the French navy but they ask merely the use of French naval dockyards.

The British question reveals the realization in London that "precautionary" naval preparations in the Mediterranean may lead to conflict between Britain and Italy. This is a terrifying prospect to French policy, but in the circumstances Laval cannot help but choose Britain in preference to Italy. The British are believed to have made it clear that any other decision would be regarded as releasing England from its continental obligations.

To France that would mean she would face aroused, Hitlerite Germany with only the lukewarm support of Italy—and Premier Benito Mussolini has too many problems of his own, at home and in Africa, to be a perfect ally. France fears also that if she repudiates Britain

T. V. O'Connor Dead; Headed Ships' Board

Center of Senate Storm Over Merchant Marine Retired in 1933.

By the Associated Press.

Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 17.—T. V. O'Connor, 65, chairman of the United States Shipping Board during one of its stormiest periods, died at his home here today, two days after suffering what was first described as a slight stroke.

O'Connor, who rose to power as a leader in the formative days of the Great Lakes Seamen's and Longshoreman's Unions, helped direct the new American merchant marine after the war. He drew Senate attacks in turning these ships over to private owners.

He was international president of the Longshoremen's Union when appointed to the Shipping Board by President Harding in 1921. Becoming the board chairman in 1924, O'Connor served until March, 1933, when President Roosevelt refused to reappoint him and he retired after the Senate attacks on his record.

Accusations against O'Connor in the Senate were that he had shown favoritism, waste and extravagance in handling a $30,000,000 Federal ship subsidy and had been irregular in sale of Government-owned ships to private lines.

Mental Experts Clash In Trial of Zenge

Chicago, Oct. 17 (AP).—In a battle of mental experts the testimony in the trial of Mandeville W. Zenge for the mutilation slaying of Dr. Walter J. Bauer was completed today. Trading hypothetical question for hypothetical question, and diagnosis for diagnosis, the State and defense left to the jury the decision whether the Missouri farm youth was sane as the prosecution contended, or went suddenly mad at the loss of his sweetheart to the emasculation victim, as the defense held.

Only the lawyers' arguments, scheduled to start tomorrow morning, and the instructions from presiding Judge Cornelius J. Harrington, remained before the jurors could start their analysis of the opposing claims. The jury was expected to receive the case by noon tomorrow.

struck Sheehy on the side of the head. He staggered against the wall.

Things Start in Earnest.

Then things started in earnest. Onlookers gasped and tumbled over one another attempting to keep out of the way. The attorneys swung fists, papers and brief cases

Shouts—both for and against the courtroom combatants—echoed into the hallways.

"Let 'em fight . . . stop 'em . . . somebody do something . . . hey, cut it out . . . where are the marshals?"

And into this dashed Mrs. Nixon, one-time "Scandals" actress, her face distorted and black hair streaming from beneath a tight-fitting turban.

"Stop them—don't let them hurt my lawyer—don't let them hurt my lawyer," she sobbed, her voice pitched high above the din.

But the puffing counsels battled on. They grunted, waved, feinted, slugged and slapped.

Press Stops the Fight.

And then up stepped an unofficial referee—Eddy Gilmore, a newspaper reporter. Amid swinging fists he wedged his way between the nearly exhausted practioners. He placed approximately 200 pounds in the center of things, collected a short jab to the midsection and finally stopped the fight.

The principals left the ring—Gardiner retiring to a clerk's office and Sheehy to the hallway. Comments in the aftermath:

Sheehy—"He called me names, he ordered me around, he hit me first, I'll do something about it.

Gardiner—"I hit him three times before he could get in a blow. Did you see that first crack? It lifted him off his feet."

Both men are in their late 50's. Gardiner is the heavier.

Damage was about equally divided. Gardiner suffered a possibly fractured left hand. Sheeby was injured on the head and face. (Gilmore was rubbing his stomach and left thumb.)

No. 3 Named Co-respondent.

During the melee, details of the Nixon case—in its second day of hearing—were almost forgotten. But until the mistrial was declared, Mrs. Nixon No. 2 (Capt. Nixon has been married three times), was seeking an absolute divorce on grounds of cruelty. The trial was continued when she decided to name Mrs. Nixon No. 3 (the latest) as co-respondent. No date has been set for a new trial.

When the battle was over, Capt. Nixon sought reporters.

"You boys saw that I didn't have anything to do with this—but it is only the beginning. Plenty is going to happen yet, wait and see."

Miss Mary Lloyd Dies on Steamer

Former Government Employe Was 74 Years Old.

Miss Mary A. Lloyd, 74, of Glen Dale, Md., died unexpectedly of a heart attack early yesterday morning as the Baltimore Mail Line steamer City of Newport News, on which she was returning from Europe, neared Norfolk, Va.

A retired Government worker and a school teacher in her youth, Miss Lloyd resided on a farm with her sole surviving relative, Daniel Lloyd, a brother. On July 31 she sailed for France on her second trip abroad. She had been touring Italy and Switzerland.

Lloyd received a radiogram from the steamer's captain telling of his sister's death. He arranged to have the body brought to Baltimore.

Miss Lloyd was born in Anne Arundel County, Md., and educated in the schools there. Funeral services will be held on the old family burial ground at the farm tomorrow at 3 p. m.

Bel Air Bank Stock Will Be Assessed

U. S. Court Rules in Closed Bank Case.

By the Associated Press.

Bel Air, Md., Oct. 17.—A 100 per cent assessment for stockholders of the defunct Farmers and Merchants Bank of Bel Air was ordered in a ruling by United States District Judge William C. Coleman, of Baltimore.

Judge Coleman's ruling was made in dismissing application for an order restraining Maj. Robert H. Archer, receiver, and the Comptroller of the Treasury from collecting the assessment.

The restraining order was petitioned by Mrs. Miriam Stirling and Harry E. Karr, executors of the estate of the late W. E. Robinson, of Bel Air, president of the bank.

Capitalized at $100,000, with 2,000 shares of stock issued at $50 par value, the bank failed to open after the bank holiday.

Between You and Me

A Temperate Political Idealism Rules Washington State; Townsendites Strong.

By Raymond Clapper

SEATTLE, Wash., Oct. 17.—Washington State, at the extreme northwest corner of the country, has all of the political idealism which southern California has at the extreme southwest corner. But it is a different kind of idealism, more practical and hard-headed than that of the starry-eyed visionaries in the Sunny South. Perhaps it is the influence of climate on politics. They are not so balmy here. In southern California they match the climate.

You will find the same groups here as you find in southern California, but wearing wraps and acclimated to more rigorous weather.

The Upton Sinclair EPIC movement up here is called the "Commonwealth Builders of Washington." The Commonwealthers, like Sinclair, want production for use. They held a convention in Tacoma a few days ago and adopted the essentials of the Sinclair program. But they don't lash themselves up into holy jumping frenzy about it.

You will find also the Utopian group here in Washington State. But they have dropped the mystical secrecy, the ritual and the religious ascetism with which the Utopian Society moves in southern California dressed up the doctrines of technocracy. Here they just call themselves Technocrats and don't try to act like saints of a secret order.

The Townsend movement is strong in Washington. But curiously, the potential Democratic candidate for Governor, one John C. Stevenson, who, by a radio campaign has made himself a small local combination of Father Coughlin and Dr. Townsend, proposes old-age pensions of $135 a month instead of the $200 suggested by the California apostle of easy money for everybody.

Such is the effect of transplanting political ideas from luxuriant California to the more temperate climate here.

Even more significant, the practical go-getting progressives and liberals who dominate the main stream of politics in Washington State tend to concentrate on the power issue and leave a good deal of the other reforming to the outside fringes. The public ownership forces in Washington have made a practical thing of their program. They have it in effect in many places, notably in Tacoma and Seattle. It has been operating for years. And they're as hard-headed about public ownership as a utilities executive is about private ownership.

Washington has no political Aimee MacPhersons as southern California has. Its liberals don't make so much noise. But don't be deceived by the absence of hymn-singing and political prayer meeting. The workers are all out in the vineyard, ringing doorbells, electing members to the Legislature, getting patronage and lobbying their power bills through at Olympia.

Politics in Washington State is dominated by a curious quartet. These four musketeers, in their several roles, are:

1. Senator Homer Bone, a thin, high-strung hell-raiser, with a lifetime of experience in practical agitation of the public ownership issue in Washington State. He had much to do with making the Senate munitions investigation spectacular and was instrumental in following through and obtaining the new neutrality legislation by audacious parliamentary strategy toward the end of the congressional session.

2. Senator Lewis B. Schwellenbach, big, easy moving, calm, shrewd, effective backstage with the slow impact of a battering ram. A freshman Senator, he scored some of the heaviest hits in the Senate utility lobby investigation. Although a freshman Senator, he undertook to break down one of Huey Long's last filibusters. While older members sat afraid to tackle the Louisiana wildcat, Schwellenbach, by slow, casual heckling disconcerted Long so much that he finally had to protect himself by refusing to yield for Schwellenbach's questions.

3. Saul Haas, an agile, wiry lookout and local trouble-shooter, who sees all and knows all. He is collector of customs here and gives rear-guard protection while the two Senators are in Washington.

4. Emil Hurja, who was a classmate of Schwellenbach at the University of Washington. He is assistant to Democratic National Chairman Farley. What more could they want?

Gov. Clarence D. Martin, Democrat, is on the spot and may not be renominated. He should not be confused with his neighbor, Gov. Charles H. Martin of Oregon, a Republican.

They are opposites. The Oregon Republican Martin, a former general in the Regular Army, former member of Congress, is an outspoken, blunt, decisive executive, popular in both parties in Oregon. Washington's Democratic Martin is a soft-shoe operator, a dilatory executive, and has lodged crosswise of the dominant Democratic group, which hopes to retire him to private life. The two Senators will avoid open participation in the struggle if they can.

One complaint against Oregon's Gov. Martin is that he has let anti-New Dealers—both Republicans and Democrats—dominate his relief set-up. The practical liberals don't like that. They have control of the new WPA and Martin's relief organization will soon be needing relief itself.

Martin's potential rivals for the Democratic nomination:

Former Senator Clarence C. Dill. He retired voluntarily last year. He is being urged to run but thus far has refused flatly.

John C. Stevenson. He appeared in Oregon politics a few years ago out of a rather vague past in the East. He is on the radio regularly, beckoning the old-age pension advocates and other extreme left-hand groups.

Otto Case, State treasurer. He also is after the Townsend vote. He is the favorite.

Washington Political Parade: Gen. C. B. Blethen, publisher of the Seattle Times, says Roosevelt will carry the State . . . Business is good . . . Washington's Lieut. Gov. Vic Meyer, is a former dance orchestra leader. After his election he opened a night club. But he also is making a good Senate presiding officer. He took on a parliamentary coach and goes at his public duties earnestly . . . Republicans are talking some about Borah, a little about Knox and none about Hoover. Bone and Schwellenbach put through a State constitutional amendment to be voted on next year which would permit the State to take over all electric power in the State, buying up private plants, and become the sole distributing agent for all of it, including Grand Coulee . . . J. D. Ross, Seattle's public power plant manager who was recently appointed to SEC, is keeping his hand in out here. The city council gave him a year's leave of absence. While in Washington, Ross is expected to obtain Federal funds for expanding the Skagit River project, a source of Seattle power, which was turned down at Washington in favor of Grand Coulee, a project of interest chiefly to eastern Washington. That would make western Washington feel better.

To some of the public power advocates here, Grand Coulee was too much of a good thing.

Driver Found Blameless in Girl's Death

Policeman Witness Weeps at Inquest in Yvonne Gallagher Treagedy.

Allen Davis, 23, Lexington, N. C., truck driver, was exonerated by a coroners' jury yesterday after an inquest into the death of 5-year-old Yvonne Gallagher, who was struck by a truck and killed at Bladensburg road ad Thirtieth street northeast.

Davis was freed on the testimony of Officer Charles Weber, of the Twelfth Precinct. Sobbing convulsively Policeman Weber related how he had warned the child to wait before crossing the intersection.

"I always called her honey. I said to her, wait a minute, honey, because I saw the truck coming. I put up both hands to show her I meant for her to wait.

"She hesitated a second and then ran toward me. The truck was going slow, but it was too close. I took a step, but it was too late."

Yvonne was returning from kindergarten to her home, 2022 Higdon place northeast, when she was killed. Her father, Earl Gallagher, identified the body later at the morgue.

The jury held the death accidental.

Everywhere that folks meet up for a round of Scotch, there is McCallum's Perfection. In Malta or Manhattan, in Cairo or Chicago, this splendid old Scotch is the order. And here's why. McCallum's Perfection is always uniform. McCallum, founded in 1807, has always been owned and operated by the members of the same Edinburgh family. Consequently, McCallum's quality is distinctive, palatable. Every drop is eight years old. Imported only in taped, sealed, tamper-proof, oval bottles with the useful jigger top—ideal for measuring.

Britain Insists Laval Choose Ally in Crisis

Definite Reply to Bid for Aid in Mediterranean Is Demanded.

the later will strengthen its friendship with Germany.

Parley Lasts Several Hours.

These points are believed to have been made clear in a conference lasting several hours last night between Laval and the British envoy.

Sir George was reported to have handed Laval a lengthy note categorically refusing to remove the British home fleet from the Mediterranean even in exchange for removal of Italian forces from Libya, a presumable threat to Egypt and the Suez Canal.

The British note was understood to insist that Mussolini must take the first conciliatory action because he has been branded aggressor against Ethiopia. Il Duce must withdraw his troops from Ethiopia before Britain will consider reducing her fleet strength in the critical area.

No Avenue of Hope.

The British reply left Laval no avenue of hope for easing Mediterranean tension as a prelude to further peace negotiatons, and the British demand for an answer on naval assistance multplied his difficulties. The chiefs of France's military, air and naval establishments were reported to support a favorable reply to Britain.

One complication was the pledges Laval gave Mussolini on his Rome visit which resulted in a Franco-Italian front against the Nazis. Another was the violent determination of a large body of the French populace that France shall not become involved in another war—and many believe Britain is headed straight for war with Italy.

Laval conferred tonight with Tewfik Rushdi Aras of Turkey, on the Italo-Ethiopian situation and later received Cir George Clerk for half an hour.

tody, named by police as a principal.

Sutton, it was said, contacted Slim Dunn, now in Alcatraz Prison in San Francisco. Dunn was generous with money supplied by Sutton. The result was the escape of the two Tri-State gangsters, Mais and Legenza, from the Richmond Jail.

The chase of this pair was so hot, and they were recaptured so quickly, that they did not have time to rub out McDonald. But before they were executed they sent word to associates in Washington to go through with their bargain.

Because the men who finally went to kill McDonald did not know him and shot at a figure in a parked car, pointed out to them by an escort, Wilson was killed and McDonald was safe in his home only a few hundred feet away.

The evidence against the men already named by police as suspects of being present on the morning of October 23, 1934, when the shooting occurred, will be presented to the Montgomery Grand Jury when it starts its regular sessions November 11.

Already secret indictments have been returned against several suspects and witnesses in District Supreme Court, so that police were able to keep their hands on all these persons.

Berry Denies Plan to Revive The Blue Eagle

industries will return to the self-regulation of the market.

"2. NRA with a narrower province and a more explicit guide from Congress will be continued.

"3. The functions of the Federal Trade Commission will be enlarged and it will take over the tasks of the NRA.

"4. A naiotnal industrial administration will replace the FTC and the NRA."

Maj. Berry was asked to comment on Emery's request that trade associations co-operate with the Federal Trade Commission, rather than lend aid to revival of NRA.

Berry said he had "no wish to take the position of answering Emery or engaging in controversy with him," but would "submit a few facts" to avoid misunderstanding.

Holds Policies Sound.

"There is no plan under way in my office to revive the NIRA," he said. "There is general agreement that no further 'emergency' legislation is required. Hundreds of substantial business men, whose letters are now pouring into my office, believe, as I do, that the fundamental policies of regulating competitive and labor standards by law are sound and desirable. These policies happened to be part of the recovery act, and were the proving ground which influenced many wise business and labor leaders to feel that they should be written into permanent law of the land."

Berry said the business conference he has called to meet in Washington is not for the purpose of preparing voluntary trade practice agreements.

"I am ordered by the President to assist with that work, as provided in the temporary extension of the recovery act, and I shall do so," he said.

"My greater job, however, is to hold conferences to serve as a central point where business, labor and the public views may be co-ordinated into the best possible solution of long-standing business problems. Industry naturally is expected to take the lead in setting forth its needs of governmental help.'

Praises Roper Invitation.

The National Association of Manufacturers' Washington release of Emery's speech in White Sulphur Springs, stated Berry had called the business conference "for the purpose of preparing voluntary fair trade practices agreements."

"Coincidentally," the association's news release stated, "Mr. Emery's address was seen as an effective acceptance of the invitation of Secretary of Commerce Roper that 'business work out for itself the degree and kind of help which it needs from the Government'—an invitation that contracted sharply with the views of the NRA co-ordinator."

Bolton, Sibley Oppose Borah On 1936 Issue

Republican Rift Widens as East Insists on War on 'Spending.'

phasis, however, on the preservation of the Constitutional rights and an unfettered Supreme Court.

In the same place earlier in the week Lewis Douglas, former budget director and at the beginning of the New Deal one of President Roosevelt's closest political and personal friends, laid down a barrage on the Federal spending program that has not been equaled by the most partisan Republicans.

Attacks on Federal "spending" likewise were prominent in the three-day session conducted by the New York Herald-Tribune Forum on Current Problems. Moreover, seldom does a night go by but that two or three speakers on nation-wide radio broadcasts make that subject their theme.

Assails Expenditures.

Only last night Representative Theodore Christianson (Republican), of Minnesota, speaking in a political series, paused in assailing administration of the AAA act and the Hull reciprocal trade program to strike at the "unprecedented expenditures of the Administration."

Thus it would appear that Federal "spending" offers an issue around which the Eastern Republicans can solidify their ranks. In addition they have reasonable promise of support on that issue from organized business, the financial communities and the right-wing Democrats of the Lewis Douglas type.

Senator Borah's proposal to Col. Roosevelt, son of the "trust-busting" President, that "monopoly" be made the paramount issue, has not inspired any enthusiasm that can be noticed so far. It is his avowed intention to force that issue on his party, breaking the domination of the Eastern wing if need be. But in the few days that have elapsed since his statement it becomes increasingly apparent that he has an uphill fight to educate his party and the country up to that issue.

Engineers Named For Danville Project

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Danville, Va., Oct. 17.—The engineering firm of Charles T. Main, of Boston, has been appointed to map plans for Danville's proposed power development in Patrick County. The engineering fees will total $133,500, but the contract provides that if the Government grant fails, the city will pay the engineers only for the work done up to that time.

R. A. Moncrieff, here to represent the company, expects to have a preliminary survey party at the scene within ten days.

More Distilled Liquor, Less Wine Imported

Duties collected on imported distilled liquors and the volume entering consumption continue to show increases over corresponding months of 1934, it is shown by a report of the Bureau of Customs for the calendar year to September 1. The report shows that imports of still and sparkling wines have decreased materially as compared with corresponding months of 1934.

Duties collected on distilled liquors in nine months of this year were $26,156,585 which compares with $22,258,300 in the first nine months of 1934. Duties collected on wines were $3,368,592 in the first nine months of this year against $5,856,772 in the same period last year.

U. S. Scientists Gather Nov. 17 At Virginia U.

Program Is Arranged for National Academy's Fall Meeting.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

University, Va., Oct. 17.—The program of the annual fall meeting of the National Academy of Sciences at the University of Virginia November 17-20, was announced here today by Dr. Samuel A. Mitchell, director of the university's Leander McCormick Observatory.

The executive council of the scientific society will open the first session of the group ever to be held in the South with a meeting at Farmington Country Club.

Dr. John Lloyd Newcomb, president of the university, will welcome the delegates at the opening of the scientific discussions November 18, and a response will be made by Dean Frank R. Little, of the University of Chicago, president of the academy.

Five morning and afternoon meetings will be held during the three days to be devoted to presentations of scientific papers, and a public lecture will be given by Prof. Harold C. Urey, of Columbia University.

Entertainment features include visits to historic shrines in Charlottesville and Albemarle County, and receptions to be given by Dr. and Mrs. Newcomb and Dr. and Mrs. Mitchell. A luncheon will be given the visiting scientists at Castalia, home of Mr. and Mrs. Murray Boocock, and the program will end with a tea at Morven, home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Stone.

University faculty members assisting Dr. Mitchell, who is chairman of the committee on arrangements, are Prof. Wilbur A. Nelson, Dean Ivey F. Lewis, Prof. A. G. A. Balz, Dean Walter S. Rodman and President Newcomb.

Seagram's Finer Taste has won American Leadership

All over the country you'll hear them saying "Seagram's." And the reason is—Seagram's is Finer—it tastes better. This finer taste is the result of more than three-quarters of a century of distilling and blending experience, and the vast Seagram treasure—millions of gallons of rare whiskies, which insure now and for years to come, the continuing, unvarying quality of Crown Whiskies.

25 Scout Units Added in 1935; 4,984 on Rolls

Record for Merit Badges Set; 4,206 Conferred in Nine Months.

Twenty-five new Boy Scout units have been organized during the year, eight of them being cub packs, the District commissioners of the Scout Council here were informed Monday night.

The group met at the home of Dr. Camp Stanley, reviewed the summer activities and planned events for the fall and winter.

The total membership of the council is now 4,984 distributed among 200 units, including troops, cub packs, and sea scouts. During the year a new phase of the senior program was started here in the form of two new rover crews, an organization for Scouts 17 years of age and over.

Merit Badge Record.

Dr. Paul Bartsch reported that for the first nine months an all-time record for Merit Badges was established, 4,206 badges having been passed in that time. Some of the leading troops in this field were Troop 82, with 213 badges; Troop 69, with 191; Troop 5, with 173, and Troop 43, with 123. The first division, under the leadership of District Commissioner William J. Weber, led the other divisions, with a total of 559 badges. Forty-two Scouts have attained the coveted Eagle Badge, highest award in scouting during the year, and 117 reached the life rank and 165 star rank. In addition, 50 palms were awarded Eagle Scouts for obtaining additional badges.

Training courses for Scouts and Cub leaders were announced by William T. McClosky as follows:

Elements of Scoutmastering each Thursday, starting October 24.

Elements of cubbing each Thursday, starting October 22.

The sessions will be held at the new training center, 1727 K street northwest, at 7:30 p. m.

Outdoor Meeting November 2.

The C. M. O. Camp Honor Society will have an outdoor meeting in Rock Creek Park at the Sixteenth street reservoir November 2.

Due to difficulty in completing arrangements, the proposed Skyland trip for tomorrow has been canceled and the committee will announce arrangements at a later date.

A housewarming for the new headquarters offices of the council will be held October 30, from 7:30 to 10:30 p. m.

Mr. Frank E. Wright has been appointed district commissioner of the Red Skin Division, replacing William H. McConnaughy, who has moved to Berwyn, Md.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London, Oct. 17.—Irregularity developed on the Stock Exchange today. Operators, lacking an incentive for fresh business owing to the obscured international outlook, realized occasionally, while Paris offered favorites for sale. Rubber shares held steady. British funds recovered fractionally, but other sections declined. The market closed easy.

Paris—Egyption Frontier Bank shares dropped sharply on the Bourse today, while other issues continued their slump as a result of pessimism over sanctions and the deadlock in consolidation efforts. The selling tendency sent international issues, rentes, chemical and coal shares down. The closing was heavy.

Berlin—After opening with only a small turnover, prices became irregular on the Boerse. Dullness developed, and quotations closed at their lowest levels of the day.

Burden Of A Nation

Five billion dollars for relief! This appropriation by the new Seventy-fourth Congress on demand of the Roosevelt Administration stunned economists and stretched the imagination of the country's taxpayers. It was unprecedented in peace time. Who was to spend it? The Administration set up an elaborate organization in Washington, with Harry Hopkins at its head. How was it to be spent? The Administration provided regulations dividing the funds between labor (for relief) and materials. But a further and more vital question was asked: What are the results? The Post, realizing the importance of this question, sent Felix Bruner, a member of its national news staff, and seasoned investigator, out into the Nation—into city alleys and country byways—to find out. This is the sixth of his dispatches.

By Felix Bruner.

Boston, Oct. 17.

Anyone who has attempted to follow the activities of the various Government relief organizations in Washington would feel right at home in Boston. As in Washington, the organization is spread all over town. Quarters in the Federal Building here became too small, so the agencies scattered to various office buildings, where workers sit at long rows of desks poring over interminable charts and figures. Outside, State and city officials, and especially some 120,000 families on relief, are wondering when the planning is going to end and the work begin.

The Government never has spent one cent for direct relief in the Bay State. That is the first thing the visitor is told, and it usually is referred to with a tone of pride. All the Government money, of which millions have been poured into the State, has been used from the beginning to give people jobs. Massachusetts has taken care of its own unemployables, and of those left over from Government jobs.

Right now, however, the situation has developed some serious aspects, due to the slowness of transition from the old program of Government relief to the new one under the $4,880,000,000 appropriation. In common with other States, Massachusetts was required to accept a cut in FERA funds. But the relief rolls did not go down in proportion and the new program didn't get started.

One of the results is that the work week on emergency relief projects has had to be cut to such an extent that some workers, heads of families in Boston, are receiving only $6 a week. The city must make up the balance from its welfare funds to keep the families from starving. City welfare costs, therefore, are jumping in proportion to the cuts in Federal relief money. This is not only true in Boston, but it is true throughout the State, and cities and towns are complaining emphatically. In Boston 24,000 workers were put on half-time because of the cut in Federal funds and the failure of the new program to function.

There is one glimpse of a silver lining in the situation, however. Beginning about the first of this month, more persons were getting jobs than were applying for relief. This was happening for the first time since the beginning of the depression At present, about 21,000 families are being cared for in Boston. During the last week in September, 975 were dropped from relief rolls because they were able to take care of themselves, and only 375 applied for relief. At this rate it will be a long time before the relief problem gets back to its pre-depression status, if it ever does, but at any rate the burden is easing slightly. At the peak, Boston was spending $1,000,000 a month of city money in addition to Federal and State contributions to care for destitute unemployed.

The policy of Washington of continually cutting relief appropriations to States is not being compensated with any other activities that would relieve the burden. The appropriation from Washington for Massachusetts in October was $5,000,000, a cut of $1,000,000 under September and $1,500,000 under August.

Early this month, weeks after the program had been started and after announcements of huge allotments for Massachusetts had been made, WPA officials here actually had only $80,000 in cash to start work in the entire State. That isn't enough money to take care of the relief load one day!

The situation here is so wound around by politics and red tape that some local observers believe it to be almost hopeless. Relief jobs are seized upon by political vultures, the unemployed are suffering and the taxpayers must pay the bill. When the announcement was made that a Federal youth administrator would be appointed for the State there was a great pulling and hauling and a using of influence. Appointment was held up for a long time. It was almost impossible to unravel the tangle. Finally, however, the appointment was given to Edward L. Casey, former Harvard football coach. So far as I could learn, this wasn't particularly pleasing to any of the politicians. Now there is a great scramble for appointments as Casey's assistants, with, as one person said, "about a million candidates."

As a matter of fact, there is precious little for the Federal Youth Administration head to do. There are three phases to the program, aid for college students, aid for high school students and apprentice employment. The first two operate almost automatically through existing relief agencies, and the last doesn't operate at all.

College aid was given under the old FERA program and it is continuing in virtually the same way. High school students whose families are on relief are given $6 a month for carfare and small expenses. They obtain the money through applications to existing agencies. The third section, that of putting apprentices to work, just isn't functioning. Somebody had the idea that employers would be pleased to put inexperienced young men and women to work in their factories to help out the relief situation. Those who mapped out the program felt that this should be done as a patriotic duty. The attitude of employers, however, is that when and if they hire additional help they prefer to put back to work their old and experienced employes who need the money just as much as the youngsters. It is a tough break for the boys and girls who are trying to get started in the world, but the attitude of employers is understandable.

Two large Federal housing projects are planned here, but not a spadeful of earth has been turned. The land has been acquired for one and is almost acquired for the other. Washington still is looking at the architects' plans, but they have not been approved. However, Andrew H. Peterson, who has charge of them, says he expects to award contracts by December 15 and hopes that families will begin moving in a year from that date. He already has received a number of applications from prospective tenants, but until the plans are approved and the costs figured—with amortization over a period of 60 years—he can't tell what the rent will be.

One of the projects, in South Boston, is expected to house 1,191 families in three-story walk-up apartments. The buildings will be erected on 30 acres of ground with playgrounds, parkways and lots of sunlight. This is not a slum clearance project, but the building of houses on vacant property. The original slum clearance plan was dropped because of the difficulty in obtaining necessary property.

The other project is in Cambridge. It calls for three-story apartments to care for 579 families. It is being erected in what is officially termed a "blighted area." Housing officials are carefully avoiding calling certain districts "slums." Real estate owners don't like the term. The South Boston housing will cost about $6,000,000 and the houses in Cambridge $3,500,000. They will provide considerable employment—when they are started.

While the PWA is referred to here, as elsewhere, as "slow," Massachusetts is dotted with permanent improvements it has brought about. Recently a new bridge, built with PWA money and costing $1,400,000, was dedicated. It connects Lynn and Revere. A new surgical ward, 12 stories high and costing $1,500,000, is being completed at the Boston City Hospital. New school buildings and additions to State institutions are numerous. It has been only through Government help that many communities have been able to keep up with the growing school population.

In all, the PWA, under the old appropriatiois, has finished 100 projects in Massachusetts, and has 111 still under construction. They cost approximately $37,000,000 and at the peak employed 18,000 persons. Under the new program, 187 projects, to cost $32,000,000, have been approved. The Government will furnish 45 per cent of the money, and the State and local communities the rest. Outstanding is a $3,000,000 sewer project in Boston. Theodore B. Parker, PWA administrator, said he believed all contracts could be awarded by December 15.

As this reporter hurried across Boston Common in search of the WPA headquarters, a band was playing diligently. It was composed of out-of-work musicians now making music for lunch-hour crowds at Government expense. At WPA headquarters it was stated that $5,000,000 worth of projects for Massachusetts had been approved, out of applications for $144,000,000 worth, but the money is slow in coming through. Only about 20 projects had been started, and they were very small. Still, there were hopes and expectations.

Labor trouble is threatening. Thus far, relief workers are expected to work 130 hours a month, when they get WPA jobs, but it was admitted that this may be cut. A conference with labor leaders was even then going on in the next room. Most of the pressure is coming from regularly organized labor unions. A few organizations of unemployed have sprung up, but they were described as "not belligerent."

'Pompeii' Hits A New High for Sensationalism

Havoc Reigns Supreme as City Is Demolished; Bard Flourishes.

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII." Merian C. Cooper's production for RKO-Radio of a story by James Ashmore Creelman and Melville Baker, adapted to the screen by Ruth Rose and Boris Ingster, featuring Preston Foster, with Alan Hale, Basil Rathbone, John Wood, David Holt, Louis Calhern, Dorothy Wilson, Wyrley Birch, William V. Mong, Henry Kolker, Murray Kinnell and John Davidson. Directed by Ernest B. Schoedsack. Previewed Tuesday night, October 8.

While "The Last Days of Pompeii" probably will linger in memory primarily as a result of the tremendously effective spectacular effects that mark its closing sequences, it is additionally notable for the soundness of a story that conveys the implication of commanding drama, even if it does not wholly realize it.

Although the title is that of the famous work by Bulwer-Lytton, the story is not. No claim is made that the Bulwer-Lytton text has been even loosely adapted to the screen. It was, to be sure, employed as a reference work and as a guide to the construction of certain of the settings and properties used in the picture, but that is all.

The narrative created by James Ashmore Creelman and Melville Baker is neither the story of the dawn of Christianity nor an authentic historical tale. It is a fictional story of the career of one man and his son, with the more profoundly moving developments of the era that witnessed Gethsemane and Calvary distantly sketched in as a remote background.

Hero Was a Gladiator.

This major story concerns Marcus, a lowly blacksmith, who learned that his vast muscular strength could earn him money in the arena. He became, in time the champion, and supposedly invincible, gladiator and waxed well-to-do. Defeating a vaunted rival and inflicting death in the process, Marcus is moved to pity by the plight of his antagonist's small son and adopts the lad as his own. A touch of paternal affection having entered his spirit, he loses his prowess as a heartless killer and himself is banished from his supremacy.

Money then becomes his sole aim. To acquire it, he seeks out "the most powerful man in Judea"—Pontius Pilate. Under the patronage of this sly weakling he achieves the first step toward wealth as a horse-thief and brigand.

It is here, too, that he encounters the Christ, who heals his son of a grievous illness and betrays the all-encompassing compassion of the First Christian. The spectacle is burned deep into the consciousness and memory of the small boy, who, when his father has become the richest man in Pompeii, keeps a rendezvous with the Christian slaves he has helped free from the tyranny of their overlords, is discovered and himself cast into the dungeon with those who are to be fed to the lions to make a holiday for the Prefect and his court.

Senses Are Staggered.

As the impotent rage of the mighty Marcus rises in a futile storm to save his son, Vesuvius sends forth the first rumbles of the catacylsm that is to come. From this point forward the story and the action become increasingly turbulent until the destruction of a proud and mighty city of marble and stone is accomplished with a realism the senses find it difficult to grasp.

If episodic, the dramatic experiences of Marcus and his son, Flavius, are at least pictured with a constantly mounting interest and suspense. This personal narrative, however, to many will seem dwarfed by that mighty secondary drama of the film that discloses the whole tragedy of the Crucifixion without ever once revealing either the face or figure of the Nazarene.

This space has applauded on an earlier occasion the directorial discretion that indicated the healing of the little Flavius, the trial before Pontius Pilate, the bearing of the Cross through the streets of Jerusalem and the final death on Calvary entirely by the power of suggestion. It is so skillfully and so superbly done that the trivial story of Marcus and his lust for wealth becomes almost negligible in comparison.

Foster is Lusty Marcus.

The central character of Marcus is played with a rough-and-ready robustiousness by Preston Foster, who is least effective in the tenderest moments of the play. In his scenes with Pontius Pilate he is completely overshadowed by the polished reading and poised assurance of Basil Rathbone, who gives the most finished performance of any member of the cast. Two competent players appear in the role of Flavius—Master David Holt as the child and John Wood as the grown man. Each performs his task well.

Alan Hale, as Burbix, the pardoned convict who becomes Marcus' chief henchman; Louis Calhern, as the prefect; Dorothy Wilson, as the Christian slave girl who supplies the plots' romantic interest, and numerous others in roles of lesser consequence contribute colorful portrayals to a picture that finally overwhelm all human effort by the prodigious proportions of its overpowering climax.

A musical score that has been arranged with great artistry to point the vital movements of the plot adds an effective embellishment that grows increasingly impressive as the action progresses.

A new release of "Screen Snapshots," devoted to the stars of the cinema in their off-duty moments, and the Pathe News are the only auxiliaries of a feature that scores a new triumph for the illimitable craftsmanship of the studios.

Yesterday's joint luncheon of the English-Speaking Union and the Shakespeare Society, of Washington, at the Carlton Hotel, resolved itself into a love feast dedicated to Shakespeare, Max Reinhart and "A Midsummer Night's Dream," despite the fact that Dr. Richard Burton, noted educator, was the guest of honor. Since Dr. Burton also was the speaker of the occasion, this was largely his fault. His remarks were addressed entirely to an enthusiastic extollation of the many superiorities of the cinema as a medium for the complete exposition of the Bard's intent as well as his spoken lines.

The Hon. James M. Beck, former Solicitor General of the United States and long a member of Congress, presided at the luncheon and himself paid glowing tribute to Shakespeare and those who are responsible for the sudden emergence of his works as foremost among the current season's present or projected offerings.

Dr. Burton, now a member of the faculty of Rollins College, Florida, already has viewed the Warner Brothers' production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" seven times and is eagerly looking forward to the day when he may see it an eighth.

And there were those who doubted that Shakespeare's fantasy would do on the screen!

Reinhardt to Carry On.

The present Shakespearean furore being what it is, it is interesting to note that Max Reinhardt in Hollywood yesterday disclosed plans for recording another Shakespeare play in celluloid.

Arriving for the premier of the "Dream on the Coast," the German impresario said he would definitely decide soon whether next to direct "Twelfth Night" or some other of the list of Shakespeare plays the Warners have in contemplation.

Enthusiastic over the "Dream's" Eastern reception, Reinhardt declared it to be his view that "the motion picture screen, as a medium, truly is being discovered for the first time."

"There is no limit now," he said. "The screen, with its advanced technique, is preparing to bring an undreamed of world before the eyes of people everywhere."

Yesterday's luncheon at the Carlton echoed that view.

Final Convention Note.

It begins to look as if this guy Shakespeare really had something!

A Premiere Is Scheduled for Tuesday Night

Gordon Play at National Will Compete With the New Week's Films.

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

Max Gordon has chosen Tuesday evening, October 22, as the date and the National Theater as the place for the world premiere of "Pride and Prejudice," dramatized from the Jane Austen novel by Helen Jerome, with Adrienne Allen, Lucille Watson, Helen Chandler and Colin Keith-Johnson in the leading roles. The play has been directed by Robert Sinclair and the settings are by Jo Mielziner, designer of the sets for "Dodsworth" and also for Miss Cornell's "Romeo and Juliet," now at the National. The Washington engagement is limited to a single week of seven performances prior to its Broadway presentation. The Tuesday night opening will not affect the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinee performances. This is heralded as a dramatic event of the first importance. The production is reported to be a massive and a costly one, which is quite in the Max Gordon tradition.

• • • •

Beginning tomorrow, the Earle Theater will celebrate the fifth anniversary of the adoption of the eminently successful vaudeville policy in conjunction with pictures of the first rank which was inaugurated in October, 1930. The chief screen feature for the week will be the Warner Brothers' production of "The Goose and the Gander," co-starring Kay Francis and George Brent, with Genevieve Tobin and others of note in support. The stage bill will star Barton & Mann and will return Paul Ash and a revue engaging the talents of 50 entertainers to the rostrum where he achieved such notable successes last year. Newsreel and orchestra, under the conductorship of Freddie Ciark, will complete the bill.

• • • •

Jack Benny will be the pictured star of the new week, beginning tomorrow, at Leow's Fox Theater in "It's in the Air," his first individual starring vehicle. He is assisted in keeping a "get-rich-quick" plot in dizzy action by Ted Healy, Nat Pendleton, Una Merkel, Mary Carlisle, Grant Mitchell and scores more. The story is one of a number of things, including a stratosphere flight that is a comedy riot. A new group of Maj. Bowes' amateurs of the air will provide the piece de resistance of the stage bill.

This is not the same group seen here a few weeks ago, but an entirely new aggregation. Maj. Bowes has some 15 of these amateur troupes on tour. The Fox Movietone News and orchestral contributions, under the baton of Phil Lampkin, will round out the program.

• • • •

When "Java Head," English picturization of the novel by Joseph Hergesheimer, is shown at the Belasco Theater, beginning with a late Friday night preview and regular engagement starting Saturday, the principal roles will be played by Anna May Wong, not seen locally since "Chu Chin Chow," Elizabeth Allan, remembered for excellent work with Clark Gable in "Men in White," and Edmund Gwenn, star of the stage play, "Laburnum Grove." J. Walter Ruben directed. The bill will be completed by the customary varied list of short-feel subjects.

• • • •

"Special Agent," first of the Federal agent-gangster stories to glorify the undercover men of the Treasury Department, will resume its downtown run at the Metropolitan Theater, beginning tomorow, with George Brent and Bette Davis in the pivotal roles, supported by Ricardo Cortez, Jack LaRue, J. Carroll Naish and many others well known on the screen. Selected short subjects and full 15-minute newsreel will round out the entertainment.

• • • •

As was to have been expected of so pretentious a production so thickly studded with stellar names, "Broadway Melody of 1936" will be continued for a second week, beginning tomorrow, on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater. Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell, Sid Silvers, Una Merkel, June Knight, Frances Langford, Robert Taylor and Nick Long, jr., are among the foremost members of the cast. The short subjects also will be carried over.

• • • •

Another picture to revive its downtown popularity, beginning tomorrow, will be "The Call of the Wild," which will take up its abode in the Columbia Theater with Clark Gable, Loretta Young, Jack Oakie and Reginald Owen in the featured roles. A prime factor in this film version of the Jack London story, also, is Buck, a magnificent St. Bernard dog. Short subjects and newsreel will complete the bill.

• • • •

At the Little Theater today the chief screen attraction is "Design for Living," the Ben Hecht version of the Noel Coward play in which one of the original author's lines has been kept intact! Frederic March, Gary Cooper and Miriam Hopkins play the leading roles. Tomorrow and Saturday the bill will be Laurel and Hardy in "Babes in Toyland."

• • • •

Coming to the stage of the Gayety Theater for the week beginning with the usual Sunday matinee will be a new Independent Burlesque attraction, bearing the title of "Stepping Stars." George Broadhurst, one of the better comics, heads the cast, which also includes Peggy Hill, co-featured soubrette; I. B. Hamp, Arline Melbourne, Eddie Gray, Gertrude Beck, Ina Thomas, the Mac Sisters and a chorus of 18.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Wise Guide.

Hollywood, Oct. 17.

ALONG Sunset boulevard in Beverly Hills you can see a number of parked autos with large signs leaning against them. On the signs is printed: "Personal guide to the homes of the movie stars."

These are the rubberneck buses of Hollywood, the sightseeing cruises for the visitor. They are unlike the buses on Broadway. There aren't any barkers shouting, "See the Bowery and Chinatown!" There aren't any decoys sitting about to lure trade. The printed sign is enough of an attraction. The cars aren't buses, but ordinary autos. They aren't mob tours. You go yourself or with a few friends and get individual attention.

One afternoon I decided to go. I wanted to see the homes of the movie stars. I wanted to hear what the visitors are told about Hollywood and their favorites. I learned things about Chaplin and Shearer and Hepburn that I never knew before—and that I'll bet the stars don't know are being broadcast about them.

• • • •

The guide speaks with authority. He impresses you as knowing what he is selling. And he is a salesman. He colors his chatter and the remarks will jolt you out of your seat more than the road will.

"We are now coming to Gloria Swanson's house," he says. "Right across the street is Herbert Marshall's house. He comes over every day, to play with the baby." He drives on: "That's Charlie Farrell's house. It's not as big as the others. He's not doing much in pictures now. He suffers from dyspepsia, you know. Just like Jimmy Cagney." The fact that all this is entirely wrong doesn't make any difference. It makes a good spiel.

• • • •

THE GUIDE continues. He never runs out of houses to point at and things to say about the stars living there. Of course, he often points out wrong houses; I knew, for I had been to the real homes.

HEPBURN.

The auto drives in and around Beverly. "There," the guide explains, "is the home of Norma Taurog, one of the few woman directors. She does all right." Blimp-like and very much a he-man, Norman Taurog would have been amused to learn what the movie fans are told about him.

"There's Katharine Hepburn's house. You can generally see her around here. She's busy making a picture now. But you generally see her running around in overalls and freckles. She's sloppy but she likes to be."

Of Eddie Cantor's home he had this to say: "The rent's $1,800 a month there. It's a big house but he needs a big one for Ida and all the girls. Last week a man from the phone company was around to collect a long distance phone bill for $480. I wonder how he could use the phone that much." He says this slyly.

• • • •

You may wonder how the guide knows where all the homes are and where he gets all his distorted statements. He explained this to me. He talks to the gardeners, to the mailmen, gets some data from the publicity departments of the studios, and reads most of the columnists.

Gardeners and mailmen—that's something that even the columnists don't do.

• • • •

THE HOLLYWOOD tour continues and we round Pickfair. "You must have seen pictures of this in the movie magazines," he says. "It's some place. See that window up there," he points. "That's Mary Pickford's bedroom. She's got a bed there 14 feet long. It's a gondola. She's got 15 servants and 8 gardeners working all the time. It costs her $7,000 a month to run the place. She's got plenty of dough."

He is a bureau of misinformation. But the average sightseer relishes it. It's like the barker taking you to the fake thrill joints in Chinatown. "And that is Charlie Chaplin's house," proclaims the guide. "What we're approaching now are the garages. He has two Rolls Royces, a Lincoln and a Ford Charlie just took himself a new wife. She drives the Rolls Royces herself. We see her all the time walking around here."

There is some question as to whether Chaplin is married to Paulette Goddard, but it is no question to the movie guide. He tells his patrons what he believes.

• • • •

"We are now coming to the town house of Norma Shearer. She has another big place at the beach, Santa Monica," says the guide. "She's been in here ever since she had the baby. They were pretty much concerned about her. Last Friday, for the first time, she went to the studios." (Norma Shearer recently returned from a trip to New York.)

On and on and on rattles the car and the driver. He tells astonishing things. Items that can't be printed. But the visitor to Hollywood takes this tour and is told plenty. The Hayes office should censor the scenarios of the movie guides as well as the other scenarios.

Ethel Lois Payne Rites Will Be Held Today

Funeral services for Miss Ethel Lois Payne, 22, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Gordon Payne, of No. 12 Woodland avenue, Takoma Park, will be held at Speare's undertaking establishment today at 2 p. m., followed by burial in Congressional Cemetery.

Miss Payne died in Montgomery County Hospital following an operation. A graduate of Washington schools, Miss Payne for the past few years devoted most of her time to music and outdoor sports. She was active in several riding and swimming groups.

Besides her parents, Miss Payne is survived by a sister, Mrs. Ruth Turner, and two brothers, John Rogers and David Gordon Payne.

Whenever you hear anyone mention the "Result Number," he is talking about Post Classified Ads—National 4200.

Kiwanis Elects Via At Charlottesville

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., Oct. 17.—The local Kiwanis Club at its weekly luncheon elected Guy F. Via president, and Frank Ix, jr., vice president.

Members elected to the board of directors were Frank Haynes, Gordon Lindsay, William H. Snyder, Roy Early, I. Walters, Bernard J. Dorsey and Dr. Dan O. Via.

President-elect Via is one of the city's leading young business men and is active in civic and religious affairs. He is a past president of the Young Men's Business Club and president of the Muncipal Band, official band of the Virginia Grand Camp, Confederate Veterans. He is a member of the choir of the First Baptist Church.

The Charlottesville Kiwanis Club is one of the most active in the entire Capital district. It has a membership of 54, with a high weekly average in attendance. Under Frank J. Edwards, president for the past 11 months, the club has been especially active in relief of underprivileged children of both Charlottesville and Albemarle County.

Veteran of World War Ends Life With Rope

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Elkins, W. Va., Oct. 17.—Paul See, World War veteran and brother of Ralph See, Randolph County clerk's deputy, ended his life by hanging in a barn on the farm of his cousin, Robert See, at Valley Head, where he had gone for a rest, after returning from a hospital in Baltimore.

The body was found dangling from rafters, with a rope around the neck. He had been in poor health a year.

The Gin you Buy—
is it made from spirits distilled exclusively for GIN?

PRIMARILY it's the quality of the spirits that determines the quality of a well-balanced gin.

We believe that gin is superior when the spirits have been distilled exclusively for the making of gin.

The Fleischmann Distilling Corporation makes gin—and nothing else. The spirits used for Fleischmann's Gin are distilled exclusively for gin.

To achieve exactly the right type of spirits to make the finest gin, Fleischmann has made thousands of experiments and devoted years of research.

ASK THESE 4 QUESTIONS WHEN YOU BUY GIN

1. Is it made from grain or molasses?
Fleischmann's is made from 100% domestic grain as stated on the label. This is the time-honored and more expensive source and produces fine and desirable spirits from this standpoint.

2. Is it an American Gin?
Fleischmann's Gin is the original American gin—made from an American formula for American tastes and drinking customs.

3. Is it made from spirits distilled exclusively for gin?
We believe that gin is superior when the spirits have been distilled exclusively for the making of gin. The Fleischmann Distilling Corporation makes gin and nothing else. Fleischmann's Gin is made from spirits distilled exclusively for gin.

4. Is it actually made by a distillery?
Fleischmann's Gin is made entirely by the Fleischmann Distillery—from spirits distilled by Fleischmann.

Teaching And Advocacy.

Although Congress, when it stipulated that no part of the appropriation for District schools might be used to pay salaries of persons "teaching or advocating' communism, probably regarded the two words as comparable, the fact is that they have no relationship. This, fortunately for Washington, is clear to the majority of the Board of Education. Fortunately, because the board's opinion serves to guarantee the intellectual integrity and thereby the usefulness of the city's teachers.

Mr. Prettyman, in his advisory oinion, made the distinction clear when he wrote: "To state that communism exists is not to 'teach' it. To state what communists believe is not to 'teach communism' * * * provided that the method or manner of statement does not imply approval." To advocate means to urge or recommend and no one with any loyalty to American principles would tolerate the urging or recommendation of a political philosophy predicated on class dictatorship. On the other hand, the essence of instruction is impartial and full exposition of facts to the end that thinking may be stimulated in the mind of the student.

Obviously, any attempt to discuss the social sciences without any reference to the gigantic Russian experiment could lead only to incomplete and erroneous conclusions. It is against the law for any one religious creed to be taught in tax-supported schools, yet the history teacher can and does present the relations of Church and State during the Middle Ages without suspicion of proselytizing. So should every teacher explore every quarter of his field in any department.

Democracy hinges on mass comprehension of truth, and truth is to be gained only through education which develops instead of discouraging thought. Shackle the teacher and education becomes a farce while its institutions disintegrate as the sad condition of the once great universities of Italy and Germany will testify. Once schools are fettered, as one great contemporary thinker has put it, "We might as well blow out the light and fight it out in the dark, for when the voice of reason is silenced, the rattle of machine guns begins."

Mr. Williams' Confession.

Nearly four months after the establishment of the National Youth Administration its director has frankly confessed that he does not know what to do with approximately $25,000,000 entrusted to him for distribution. His expression of bewilderment is such an amazing commentary on the entire work-relief program that it should be pondered by every American.

With $50,000,000 to spend, the NYA set out to ameliorate the effects of depression upon the youth of the country according to some mysterious and totally undivulged program. About half the allocated amount was set aside for payment of wages to 300,000 college and high school students for part-time work. Finding that few such jobs were available, officials decided that this portion of the fund appropriated to end the dole may now be used to create a new dole system.

There remains the task of spending the other $25,000,000. With typical snap-judgment, NYA officials originally planned to furnish employment for several million youths who are not attending school. After four months of floundering they have made the remarkable discovery that there are not even enough jobs available "for men with family responsibilities." At this point Executive Director Williams' astounding confession before the New York Welfare Council comes into the picture:

> Confronted with this, I don't know where to turn, I don't know what to do. The only way out I see just now is public work for these young people, something for cultural expansion and increasing of our natural resources, like the CCC.

With such utter confusion in the mind of the director, the intelligent spending of the fund entrusted to his discretion is obviously impossible. If the NYA program goes forward in spite of its executive director's fundamental misgivings, the pinnacle of irresponsible government will have been reached.

Far-reaching as Mr. Williams' confession is, however, other factors emphasize what is entailed in this debauchery of governmental functions. Schools throughout the country are in desperate need of money. Education is neglected for want of sufficient teachers, buildings, equipment, etc. The school systems of the 48 States could profitably use many times $25,000,000, if forthcoming through proper channels. Yet that fund was handed to a single arm of Washington's bureaucracy which had no fitness for its task, which had no mandate for its task and which now admits that it is incompetent to handle its self-arrogated responsibility.

Our Aging Population.

From studies made by State planning boards and special estimates prepared for its information, the National Resources Committee concludes that the population of the United States will have ceased to grow by 1960. Although these estimates are based upon various assumptions that may be belied by actual developments, our population will certainly become stable within the near future if the present trend of birth and death rates continues. If stability is attained, 25 years hence, the proportion of citizens 60 years of age and over will be about doubled, while the number of young people under 20 years will correspondingly decrease.

Conclusions similar to those reached by the National Resources Committee have been brought to public attention upon numerous occasions by actuarial experts in the employ of life insurance companies, but our economic planners have on the whole been surprisingly indifferent to the importance of changes in the age composition of the population. Not only does the growing percentage of old people create new problems of old-age dependency, but it indicates strongly that more working opportunities must be provided for the upper age groups, incapable of doing the hard physical labor and maintaining the fast pace exacted of younger individuals.

Moreover, not only the working capacity of the people but their consumptive needs and their desires alter radically as middle-age and old-age groups begin to gain in relative importance. And above all else, it is clear that a planned economy must not base its paper schemes upon an assumed steady expansion of mass production of a limited number of commodities. Heretofore, the pace of American industrial development has been predicated upon a rapid growth of population capable of absorbing more and more of the same kinds of goods. In the future, however, production will have to be directed toward the satisfaction of a greater variety of demands, if the total volume of output is to be prevented from steadily decreasing.

These are some of the many considerations which our long-distance planners must keep constantly in mind if their schemes are to be practicable. They must also study the problems created by the migration of people from State to State, from town to country, and from city to city. Thus it may still be possible, indeed necessary, to make provision for a rapid growth of population through construction of public works and community facilities in some parts of the country, while other sections are actually losing people. Towns as well as States may grow at the expense of other towns and States. In fact, that is the case at the present time.

Although the problems created by a stable population will not be felt equally by all regions, industries manufacturing for a national market will have to accommodate their output to the changed and restricted needs of a body of consumers that has ceased to grow. In short, the country is confronted by the awkward fact that the industrial output per man is increasing rapidly, while consumer demand is declining.

That situation certainly calls for a much greater diversification of our productive activities and a reform of the distributive system that will enable each consumer to buy more of the things that can be produced. It does not imply or necessitate imposing universal restrictions upon the output either of agriculture or industry. Progress, instead of stagnation, is quite compatible with a stable population, provided we plan wisely. The conditions ahead of us are simply a challenge to attain the higher general living standards made possible by vast productive potentialities which are not being neutralized by a rapid growth of population.

Life And Fiction.

On the front page of the papers recently was a dispatch from Banff, Canada, which might almost have been torn from the pages of a James Oliver Curwood novel. It had all the ingredients which made that author so popular—murder, manhunt, "mounties." Curwood could not have picked a better plot for one of his books than these simple facts. Two youthful Doukhobor gunmen from near Arran, Saskatchewan, were killed and a third wounded after they had killed two Royal Northwest Mounted policemen and two constables.

England has its tenacious Scotland Yard and we have our efficient G-men. But there is an undeniable lack of mechanism to the ranging hunt of the Mounty that naturally surrounds it with an unusual amount of glamour. Great Britain's system is one of quiet and devious ramifications. Our country's is based on the most up-to-date scientific methods of criminal apprehension. Both the Yard man and the G-man are able to keep in direct contact with headquarters by means of radio and cable. But the Mounty is on his own, so to speak, when he goes into trackless, snowbound country after his man. Then it is the law against the outlaw and the only witness is the grim and silent North.

Perhaps, if Mr. Curwood had been writing the story, he would have added a touch of romance or made revenge the motive for the crime. Actually the toll of dead resulted from a charge of shopbreaking. That the beginning of the story differs somewhat from accepted novel formula is of little account. The end of it is as typical of Curwood as if these four officers had been characters in "The Flaming Forest" and had obeyed to the letter Superintendent McVane's last words: "Bring him back, alive or dead."

Significant Intervention.

As head of the AAA Secretary Wallace has dedicated himself to the task of raising the prices of certain basic farm products. Naturally, an advance in such prices tends to lead to increases in the wholesale and retail prices of foodstuffs. Mr. Wallace is compelled to admit that fact, but he is obviously anxious to minimize the extent of the rise in local retail bread prices, said to be necessitated by greater costs for flour and other raw materials.

On the basis of estimates furnished by the Consumers' Counsel for AAA, he concludes that an advance of one cent in retail bread prices is not justified. The economist, however, will point out that such computations take no account of labor, distributive and overhead costs which may also have risen during the past twelve months. And the bakers may question Mr. Wallace's assumption that any current price increases are "unfair" unless accompanied by an equally great increase in material costs. If profits have been below a fair average, for instance, a rise in prices may be justified without corresponding additions to expenses.

The merits of this particular controversy are too complicated to warrant snap judgments. Furthermore, the issue raised is one that goes somewhat deeper than the immediate problem. So far, no Government official has been empowered to fix the retail prices of bread, meat or other articles of necessity, although the Administration price-raising policies undoubtedly affect such prices. The consumer's protection against profiteering still lies in the operation of competition. And for all its defects this is a vast improvement over a system of prices fixed in accordance with an average-cost formula subject to all the errors its complexity would invite.

If we should ever resort to governmental fixation of retail prices, moreover, the determination of price schedules would call for prolonged study by an impartial agency. We should not be satisfied with the pronouncements of a political official who would inevitably feel called upon to justify his policies in the eyes of consumers by keeping retail prices as low as possible.

The mere fact that Mr. Wallace thinks it incumbent upon him to halt the rise of retail bread prices by public admonitions shows how easily and logically one kind of government intervention leads to another. The activities of the AAA, including the levy of processing taxes, have forced price readjustments all along the line from farmer producer to ultimate consumer. Advances in living costs now cause the Secretary of Agriculture to turn to regulation of profit margins as a means of propitiating his critics.

So far his intervention is purely informal and without legal sanction. But the significance of this effort to check a rise in retail bread prices will not be lost upon those who realize that there is no comfortable halfway house between a competitive and a socialistic economy.

Minister Herridge Resigns.

The resignation of W. D. Herridge, Canadian Minister to the United States, occasions real regret. It removes from Washington an able and distinguished member of the diplomatic circle who has helped to strengthen the friendly ties existing between Canada and the United States during the four and one-half years of his service.

The fact that Mr. Herridge's resignation immediately followed the defeat of the Conservatives in the general election has given rise to fears that Canada may be preparing to follow a bad American example by introducing the spoils system into her still young diplomatic service. However, Mr. Herridge's close personal connections with the defeated head of the Conservative Party, former Prime Minister Bennett, no doubt accounts for his decision to withdraw.

He is not only a brother-in-law of Mr. Bennett, but, prior to his marriage, he was closely associated with him as a friend and political adviser. Furthermore, he is known to have had differences with the incoming prime minister, Mr. Mackenzie King. So there is ground for hoping that the resignation of Mr. Herridge will not be a signal for the kind of "house cleaning" that demoralizes the American diplomatic service at regular intervals.

Rumors that the present Canadian Minister to Washington may be succeeded by the able Undersecretary of State for External Affairs, O. D. Skelton, a member of the Bennett government, are satisfying in this connection. They provide indirect evidence that Canada is not prepared to introduce the spoils system in a branch of the government service that so greatly needs experienced and able men, capable of representing the whole nation without consideration of partisan affiliations.

Jefferson As Prophet.

From the San Francisco Chronicle.

For the literal fulfillment of a prophecy we propose this entry in a free-for-all. The words are those of Thomas Jefferson:

Were we directed from Washington when to sow and when to reap, we should soon want bread.

Well, we are directed from Washington when to sow and when to reap—also when not to sow and when not to reap; when to plow under and when to drown little piggies.

And if it were not for the import of millions of bushels of wheat we literally would be without bread. And even today Secretary Wallace is wistfully experimenting with rusted-wheat bread.

It is the irony of political fate that it is the party professing allegiance to Jefferson, while going counter to his principles, that has brought to pass what he put hypothetically to emphasize its absurdity.

"We Who Are Unprejudiced."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The article appearing in The Post entitled "Realism on Liquor" is just another flimsy, selfish and un-American "blowoff" flaunted before the minds of an intelligent citizenry of Washington and elsewhere.

A thing that is right is always right. Prohibition was, is and always will be a principle of right. Prohibition has never failed the total abstainer. Prohibition has never caused him to curse, kill, starve and degrade himself in a thousand other ways. It is the drinker from the least to the greatest that has made a mockery of liberty as guaranteed by our American Constitution.

Shall we who are enlightened and unprejudiced by abstemiousness consider as worthy of the slightest flight of our imagination any argument advanced in favor of drink by those who drink or uphold others in so doing?

Can any liquor defender deny that the home and society is not involved and jeopardized by the scourge of drink?

Do sane people use gentle persuasion with mad dogs, lions and snakes? No! They have too much sense. We have ironclad methods of curbing these beasts, and why should we not use just as strenuous methods in curbing the beastly liquor traffic?

We have never compromised with the morphine addict, and what right have the law-abiding citizens of America to compromise with liquor?

Let every red-blooded American fight with every ounce of his energy this hellish traffic to its very death. Prohibition was never enforced, and let us really enforce it. M. R. P.

Washington, Oct. 13.

Borah Vs. Hugo.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The article in Sunday's Post on the League of Nations has about swept the field in its grasp. To enforce facts stated in that article, and to make plain the inconsistency of some of our well-meaning people, I call attention to the parallel between Senator Borah and Mussolini—of course, in attitude and not in character.

Neither will admit he is wrong, in the face of the logic of facts. Gen. R. E. Lee could, on the Battlefield of Gettysburg, acknowledge his mistake in Pickett's Charge; because Lee was big enough to confess he could make a mistake. But, despite the now uttered and unuttered judgment of nine-tenths of the civilized world, as to the League's place in the world of nations, these opposers of the organization think their prestige would be injured by confessing they got a wrong angle when they tried to minify, and even lampoon, the organization.

If the nations of earth, after a World War, which came near eliminating civilization, agree to come together, in solemn covenant, to outlaw war, what sort of a civilized man is he who does not rejoice at such an attempt? But Senator Borah, and his kind, have said otherwise in times past. Rather than admit their error, they make ridiculous remarks concerning "self-interest at the back of League action;" or speak of the futility of its action at best. Mussolini defies the League; Senator Borah would make light of it, even evidently to wishing it to fail—all to make good his original action and prophecy.

Over against Senator Borah, I would quote a long-ago utterance from Victor Hugo: "A day will come when bullets and bombshells will be replaced by the universal suffrage of nations; by venerable arbitration of a great sovereign senate, which will be to Europe what Parliament is to England, the Diet to Germany, the Legislative Assembly to France. A cannon will be exhibited in a public museum, as we now exhibit instruments of torture. A day will come when two immense groups, the United States of America, and the United States of Europe, shall be seen placed in the presence of each other, extending the hand of fellowship across the ocean." But Victor Hugo was a poet-prophet. Our American statesman is simply living in the present.

"At Last, The Clergy."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "They also serve who stand and wait," so after three years of waiting our Nation's clergy are now sweetly invited by the New Deal autocrat to contribute a pre-election, churchly contribution to the White House treasury of political wisdom—hitherto so amply, monopolistically supplied by the Ph. D.'s. For, whatever the gentleman from Hyde Park may think of their views on public questions, one recalls that he didn't consult them when stumping the country in 1932. He knows the voting value of church leaders! Therefore this New Deal appeal for counsel from a quarter so little honored while he was concocting and legislatively marketing repudiation, Presidential usurpation, Federal control and bureaucratic snooping in every detail of business operation, robbing bondholders and "soaking the rich," dead or alive; instigating labor strikes and business demoralization by his constant favoritism towards organized labor, thus directly discriminating against both employers and the unemployed, and the development of that octopus-like bureaucracy into an army of 750,000 at an increased expense for the Nation of more than $100,000,000.

And, as I recall it, even during his preparation of that security act to which he now so solicitously invites their study, the gentlemen of the cloth were not called into the sanctum sanctorum and asked to contribute ideas on that subject. Its construction was strictly and fully attended to by the busybodies of his kitchen cabinet and legalized by the choral howls of the congressional kennel!

But now, and without even a grain of clerical advice from churches, the New Deal has been marketed, and, for its better peddling, who might be so useful as the hitherto-ignored thousands of clergymen? Hence this genial invitation to step up into the choir loft and unite with highbrow magician and lowbrow politician in lustily singing "'Tis Done, the Great Transaction's Done!"

How To Reach The People?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: By soaking the rich, doling the poor and letting the middle class catch-as-catch-can, President Roosevelt hoped to harmonize the three elements and make one homogeneous mass by his New Deal policies. All other experiments having failed, through the laws of nature, and the protection of the people's rights by the Supreme Court, he threatened to take his case directly to the people. How could this be done?

The rich steer clea of the churches; the poor cannot afford to go, and the churches depend upon the middle class, who are in the majority, for their support. He could not contact with each individual in person or by mail. The more quiet and better way would be through the ministry. We have heard the result. What next?

The Greatest Crapehangers.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With deep respect for H. de Jersey, may I take exception to his viewpoint. Let him see the story of the "Good Samaritan" to contrast his hero, "the Levite who passed." Contrasts cause contentment, as psychiatrists say. Albert Einstein would, or could, suggest a mathematical solution by using the word "vector" in place of "viewpoint." All agree the League is a power in itself. Yet, they have to meet grapehangers, of which they all agree, the greatest is the nation or individual, as Calvin Coolidge might say, with the "das lieber Ich" complex.

An Appeal.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Through your paper I am asking a favor in making one last appeal to locate my missing husband, Thomas Joseph Farrell. He has been gone four and one-half months from me and our three children. If you would be good enough to publish this letter in your paper, it now being the time of our wedding anniversary, it may help to restore him to us.

Chance For Another Olivier.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: George Bernard Shaw says: "Ethiopia is not a nation. It is a country of warlike tribes without any feudal relation to the Amharic emperor. He may be able to keep his own tribe in order to some extent; but his writ runs no further."

And so Ethiopia is about where France was in the middle of the fifteenth century. The king's power didn't extend much farther than the environs of Paris. His authority over the dukes and counts who ruled in the rest of the country was merely nominal. It was Louis XI who, partly by diplomacy and partly by force, broke the hold of the great feudal powers and who created a unified kingdom. In these measures he was advised by Olivier le Daim who was the king's barber, but also a statesman. Here is a chance for Mr. Roosevelt's barber, if he has one.

This ruthless policy enabled France to hold her own against Spain and the holy Roman empire. It paved the way for the dazzling, if temporary successes of Louis XIV. Of course, there is much to be said on the other side. For instance these French kings did durn little for the farmers. And finally they lost their heads.

These days a great and important part of the human race seems to be hiking back to the Middle Ages. One Fuehrer, one party, one press, one pulpit. The world is still moving, but in reverse.

The Post Impressionist

The Fires Of Yesteryear.

Post Office, Friday.

We have long experienced a certain distrust of reference books. We felt that they lacked a proper appreciation of romantic values. And now a standard work of reference has failed us.

* * *

It was Fifteenth Century ballade-maker Villon who first metrically inquired the fate of the Phrynes: Dante having preceded Villon, he received no literary response for many a generation. Then, however, dawned our present era of baleful biography, with inflationist presses depreciating amatory currency by popular lives of such Villon postliminiaries as de Montespan and du Barry. We were, accordingly, startled when there dropped on our little desk, as softly as autumn leaves in Lafayette Square, the 690 crimson pages of T. Everett Harre's novel, published today, concerning iridescent Miss Montez.

Lola Montez! "Why," we said, "surely even the works of reference will have told her strange story: one of the most daring creatures of a dangerous age—which ended scarcely 70 years ago."

Her contemporaries wove so many purple lies around her: how could she have less than a dozen modern defenders, debunkers to a score? The demonstrable heroine of so many incredible marvels: it seemed equally incredible that the encyclopedias hadn't exhausted her history.

But they hadn't.

Take, for instance, the Encyclopedia Britannica.

We turned to "M": no mention of Lola there—not even a curt "See . . . " somebody else. We went to the elaborate index of this mighty work: "MONTEZ, Lola (Brit, dancer) see Gilbert, M. D. E. R." And then: GILBERT, Maria, D. E. R." referring you to III-243-d, XIV-412d, X-344a. Index: "Brit. dancer." Vol XVI: "Spanish dancer." Vol III: "Irish adventuress." Pusillanimous Vol. X (symbol of anonymity): just a general "dancer and adventuress."

The Britannica does admit that Lola (1818-61) was born in Limerick, taken to India, sent to Europe, "made a runaway match with a captain . . . and accompanied him (back) to India." It is granted that she was divorced, "studied dancing," made "an unsuccessful appearance in London . . . appeared with considerable success in Germany, Poland and Russia."

But later? "She became the mistress of the old King of Bavaria, Ludwig I . . . created Comtesse de Landsfeld, and given an income of £2,000 . . . the real ruler of Bavaria . . . Her political opponents proved too strong . . . she was banished. In 1848 she came to England . . . married George Heald, a young officer in the Guards. In 1851 she appeared in America, and in 1853 Heald was drowned at Lisbon. Subsequently she appeared in Australia, but returned . . . to America, where she died."

Could the bones of biography be picked barer? What happened in all the intervals thus leaped? We got no detail of her death in Manhattan, in poverty, but in faith. Nothing of the elder Dumas' admiration, or the controversy she created—and, we always suspected, cultivated—here in America from that New York of the roaring Fifties, before New York had any Roaring Forties, down to the New Orleans of G. W. Cable, out to the goldcoast of Bret Harte.

* * *

And the Encyclopedia's account is typical. Bolitho, whom we knew in Paris, wrote a brilliant essay, but left incident aside. D'Averbne is casual.

Small wonder that Mr. Harre had to spend eight years on his volume. The average modern biographer would have been lucky to get off with 18—but wouldn't have had 8 years' patience. The author of "The Heavenly Sinner" (Macaulay) unearthed books long forgotten on dusty library-shelves, pamphlets long lost in second-hand bookshops' cobwebbed corners. He dug up and polished up references to Lola in dull documents and duller letters of the very existence of which both glib magazines and esoterie encyclopedias rested ignorant. Him at least no interval escaped: where data failed, imagination adventured. We called his book a novel; we still call it a novel written in the Corelli manner, but complied in the manner of Froude: his publishers prefer to call it "a novelized biography."

However, we don't intend this column as a review, which lies within Colleague Hall's province. We venture merely to dissent from Mr. Harre's interpretation of St. Luke, VII-47. Surely the meaning is: "She has loved much—been grateful—because she was forgiven."

* * *

The rest is at present Mr. Harre's business. Our own present business is to use his tempestuous Lola as evidence that the brightest romances become blind spots in the works of reference, and that the most tempting subjects deter the average modern biographer because search for them requires real research—often as much as 96 months of it.

"Ou sont les neiges d'antan?"—Where are the snows of yesteryear?" They are still to be found—but not by sitting in an easy-chair and turning the pages of an encyclopedia.

Bad Influence Of Capitals.

New York, Oct. 17.

GOV. MARTIN L. DAVEY'S disclosure that many members of the Ohio State football team have been carried on the public pay rolls suggests again the grave danger of maintaining a State university in the same town with a State capital.

This peril to the morals of the young was first detected in Baton Rouge, La. It was unforeseen in the beginning and did not become acute until Huey P. Long became dictator of the State. Then, however, the best youth of Louisiana found themselves exposed to influences which could have only an evil effect on their character and their citizenship. Many of them were taken into political jobs at the center of government in which they learned, much too early in life, what government is. And all of them were thrown into close daily contact with the members of the Legislature, the lobbyists and professional politicians of all sorts, including, of course, the Governors.

It may be argued that persons who are old enough to attend a university and learn the beautiful mystery of life from the birds and bees and bullfrogs are old enough to come through such association uncontaminated. But there is a difference. In studying the beautiful mystery of life under formal conditions in college the student approaches the subject in a clean, wholesome way. He should approach the beautiful mystery of government in a similar way. He should experiment in college and class politics and government first, thus preparing himself for experience to follow in mature life.

• • • •

BUT to learn about government in a State capital—and particularly in such a capital as Baton Rouge under the dictatorship—is to learn about it in the alleys and gutters of politics. This distorts the student's ideas beyond recovery, and he goes from college into his career, probably a career as a political job-holder, with no idea but to live on the State for the rest of his life.

The majority of the students of Louisiana State were not old enough or shrewd enough to realize what was happening to them. Never having seen government in any other guise, they thought the State government which they observed in daily operation was the correct version. Consequently, they saw no dishonor in accepting a State job, and only seven of them protested when their dictator suppressed their student newspaper, put in a censor for future editions, and announced that he would fire "a thousand of the little ——" if they dared to say a word against their Fuehrer.

• • • •

OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY is situated in a capital which can hardly be regarded as a fit place to burnish the ideals of young Americans. For although Ohio has been called the cradle of Presidents, the State capital was also the bullpen in which the historic Ohio gang of the early 1920s received their training. It is too late now to do anything about it, but association with this group of sterling statesmen in a rather compact city must have had a poisonous effect on the character of innocent students whose misfortune it was to be in school in those days. The Ohio gang of the 1920s was the most notorious class of statesmen that ever infested the State capital of Ohio, but that does not necessarily mean that they were the worst. The average run of State legislators and politicians probably is just as bad.

Illinois, whether by accident or political trade, acted much more wisely when the State university was set down at Champaign, a long distance from Springfield.

Such is the effect of sin or sinners that nowadays there be statesmen and students in Baton Rouge and Columbus both who will offer solemn arguments to justify the carrying of the varsity football team on the State pay rolls, even though the duties of their positions be strictly theoretical. And there is logic in this if it be first conceded that students who are not football players have a right to hold patronage jobs as deserving Democrats or Republicans, as the case may be. Granted this, it would be unfair and un-American to bar the gridiron heroes, as they are called, from similar benefits.

IT is being discovered that college students in State capital towns are very precocious in politics and acquire jobs quickly, some of them, in all probability, never to be pried loose from the public pay rolls as long as they live. It seems a deplorable waste of money and education to squirt knowledge over a student for four long, expensive years only to prepare him for a career as a sergeant-at-arms or justice of the State Supreme Court.

It has been suggested before and should be urged more diligently now, in view of Gov. Davey's disclosures, that the laws relating to the maintenance of certain establishments in proximity to universities should be enlarged. At present it is provided by law in all States that no saloon, gambling hell or house of prostitution shall be permitted to exist within 5 miles of a university. The reason for this provision is obvious and wise. Such places tend to impair the morals of the students. But the early legislators, in their wisdom, forgot to include State capitals among the forbidden institutions.

Parade Of Animals

By

William Lyon Phelps

HERE is a big, new sumptuous, fascinating book of nearly 700 pages with some information on every page, and with more than 700 pictures. It will make a splendid Christmas present for anyone between the ages of 9 and 90.

It is called "Parade of the Animal Kingdom." It is written by Prof. Robert Hegner, of Johns Hopkins University, assisted by Jane Hegner, formerly instructor in the University of Missouri.

• • • •

There are 39 chapters and an index; and every kind of animal is described, from sponges to sparrows, from mice to mastodons. Worms, crabs, fishes, crocodiles, birds that hunt and are hunted, woodpeckers, prairie-dogs, whale, timber-wolves, seals and snakes.

I wish I knew the total number of animals now existing, on the earth; they would be almost as difficult for a census-taker as the number of leaves on the trees or the number of blades of grass. I wonder if any scientific man could give even a guess that would come say within a hundred million of the correct figure. I asked a man once who had mowed a certain lawn for 40 years, how many individual blades of grass he had cut during that period; and he had a headache for the rest of that day.

The Sinews Of War

Trade Figures Show Italy Cannot Live Within Itself.

By Bertram Pickard.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Geneva.

IN his speech of October 2 to the mobilized forces of the Fascist regime, Signor Mussolini was very careful to distinguish between economic sanctions, on the one hand, and military sanctions, or warlike acts, on the other. He said, furthermore, that while the former would be met in the spirit of discipline and sacrifice, the latter would be at once resisted by military or warlike measures.

From this attitude, which is only a repetition of earlier decisions taken by the Italian cabinet, three deductions may be made with some certitude. First, that Mussolini believes that financial and economic measures of restraint will not alone rob him of success. Second, that he anticipated such measures would be taken by the League. Third, that he is counting upon Laval to prevent League opposition from overstepping the limits of economic sanctions, unenforced by such warlike measures as a naval blockade.

Mussolini's third calculation may very well prove correct, for some time to come at least. In view of the strong desire, not only in France, but in all countries, to prevent the war in Africa spreading to Europe, it was certain that in the first stages of the conflict the League would try to avoid those measures likely to lead to an armed clash with Italy, difficult as this may be in practice.

Therefore the question of economic sanctions becomes one of paramount importance. Will they suffice to deprive Italy of the sinews of war fast enough to wreck the chances of military success in Ethiopia? Again, will they, in the long run, give to the League the power to control the nature of the settlement when it comes?

• • • •

THE nature of Italy's problem, so far as the sinews of war are concerned, is revealed in broad outline by tables compiled from the League's statistical year book 1934-35.

Table I shows strikingly the enormous drop in Italy's foreign trade, both exports and imports, since 1929. It also shows the growing proportionate increase of imports over exports, which explains the serious difficulties Italy has had in recent times to finance her purchases from abroad. In short, it reveals an already desperate economic situation which can hardly be improved through the burden of new war debts, and the closing of further markets through official sanctions, and unofficial hostility to aggression.

Table II shows that approximately 50 per cent of Italian imports are essential raw materials of vital importance for the prosecution of war; while about 80 per cent of Italian exports are represented by manufactured goods and foodstuffs (including wine and fruit), which upon closer analysis prove to be either semiluxury articles or articles for which the rest of the world is not dependent upon Italy.

Table III shows that 45 per cent of Italian imports come from four countries, namely, the U. S. A., Germany, the United Kingdom and France; while 40 per cent of Italian exports are taken by these self-same countries.

• • • •

TWO general conclusions stare one in the face from an examination of the foregoing tables. First, it is plain that anything approaching a universal interruption of Italy's foreign trade would, before very long, not only render war in Ethiopia, or anywhere else, impossible, but would bring about a catastrophic breakdown of Italian economic, and especially industrial, life.

Second, it is clear that Mussolini's optimistic calculation that economic sanctions can be successfully withstood must be based upon two hypotheses: (a) that the military campaign will speedily bring Italy within reach of at least her minimum objective, whatever that may be; and (b) that Italy can count upon considerable non-co-operation with the League in its application of sanctions.

Table I.

Italy's Imports and Exports.
(Total values in millions of United States gold dollars.)

	1929	1933	1934
Imports	1139.7	387.2	391.8
Exports	801.4	312.1	276.0

Table II.

Analysis of Chief Categories.

	Imports		Exports
	1929	1932	1929	1932
Articles of food	20.4	23.4	24.7	32.4
Raw materials	49.6	47.0	21.1	17.2
Manufactured articles	26.5	26.4	54.1	49.9

Table III.

Chief sources of Italian imports and destination of exports, by percentages, (1933):

	Imports.	Exports.
United States	15	8.7
Germany	14.7	12.2
United Kingdom	9.8	11.4
France	5.5	7.6
Switzerland	3.6	8.1
Argentine	3.3	6.4

To consider the second question first: It will be seen at once, by reference to Tabe III, that without at least a measure of co-operation from the United States and perhaps Germany, the League might be forced to abandon economic sanctions, or at any rate to resort to blockade to enforce them.

As regards the United States, the President's prompt and timely action of October 6, implementing the recent neutrality legislation, facilitates the League's task. The President's warning that business transactions with the belligerents would be at the risk of the individuals and businesses concerned has two salutary effects from the point of view of sanctions application. First, it makes any important increase in American exports to Italy most unlikely. Secondly, it would reduce political difficulties as between Geneva and Washington to a minimum in the event of the League enforcing economic sanctions by blockade.

Disregard Of Sanctions Or Speedy Victory, Duce's Hope.

• • • •

IF LATER the United States Government should embargo certain raw material (e.g. copper, cotton and oil) as being in effect munitions of war, that would be an important added help to the League. The urgency of the question of oil to Italy may be gauged from the fact that between July, 1934, and June, 1935, it is estimated that Italy has nearly trebled her purchases of oil from Rumania, at double the 1934 price.

Geneva is also concerned to know whether, in the event the League states should suspend purchases, in whole or in part, of Italian exports, the United States would continue purchasing at the same or even a higher level?

The question of Germany's attitude is both more and less difficult. It is more difficult, since the maximum co-operation likely to be accorded to the League is the negative one of neutrality without embargo on munitions, which at once raises grave questions of trade with Italy across Austrian and Swiss territory, both of which states are in honor bound by their obligations under the Covenant to apply economic sanctions to an "aggressor" state. At the same time, the question is made less difficult by reason of the fact that Germany's position both as regards credit and raw materials limits her power to assist Italy assuming she wished to do so.

• • • •

THE question as to whether Mussolini is right to count upon so rapid a military success, thus escaping the full impact of economic sanctions, is hard to determine. No one can predict the course of the war, nor the point at which Mussolini would be ready to negotiate a settlement, and along what lines. But assuming, as is probable, that the total conquest of Ethiopia is impracticable short of a long campaign, the following considerations are important.

It may be that Mussolini would be ready to negotiate, assuming the Negus and the League were willing to concede a compromise solution between Italy's demands and the "suggestions" of the League council's committee of five (e. g. an Italian mandate over all the colonial territories of the Abyssinian empire). But this is a tremendous assumption. There is no reason to suppose that the Negus could or would make such a suicidal concession, short of complete defeat; nor that the League, with further sanctions at its command, would agree to so unjust a settlement being accorded as the reward of aggression.

Of course, there remains the further alternative that the "collective system" may break down altogether, in which event the end is quite unpredictable, but certainly fraught with grim tragedy for the world.

No End of Books

By

Theodore Hall

Hail Columbia!

"THE COLUMBIA ENCYCLOPEDIA" (Columbia U. Press, $17.50)—let me get this well understood at the start—is an intelligent thorough, and beautiful piece of work. And if you do not share my passionate addiction to encyclopedias and reference works of all kinds, and are consequently a little vague on how one goes about appraising 1,949 large pages holding over 5,000,000 words on everything from the origin of the letter "A" to a description of Zyriansk, province of the U. S. S. R., then I had best be specific and particular.

Take intelligence. Whatever good adjectives, for instance, may justly be applied to the 24 massive volumes of the "Encyclopedia Britannica," that Mount Everest of the English encyclopedic scene costing around $150, the fact remains that it is not an intelligent work. And the "C. E." is. This contrast, made advisedly, springs from the fact that the sum of the world's knowledge is far too vast and, above all, too specialized, ever to be contained in a single-titled work. Like most axioms, that statement is quite dull and uninteresting until it is illustrated.

Let us set side by side, then, a chemist, a lawyer, a botanist, a philosophy-student, a physician, and —praise be that we do not forget him!—a layman. Now each one of the specialists, trained in his own terms and lingo, can look up some article in his proper field in the "Britannica," understand it from A to Z, and be genuinely instructed. The poor layman, however attentive and serious in his curiosity, has only to start reading an article on chemistry, law, botany, philosophy, or medicine in the same work, to be utterly floored and squelched within five lines. And the specialists smile with a very superior smile.

But hold! Let the lawyer step outside his field and look at botany, or the chemist essay philosophy, or the philosopher medicine and anatomy, and you find—due to the above-mentioned axiom—that each becomes the veriest tyro among laymen. The plain fact is that the "Britannica" is written for a thousand specialists in a thousand fields. And the layman, whether he be that by nature or by overstepping his own fence, is cast into a smothering sea of a thousand technical lingos. I know—I've tried them all.

• • • •

NOW Clarke F. Ansley, the editor-in-chief of the "Columbia Encyclopedia," and his staff were intelligent enough to see that impasse. They knew that in each of the thousand special fields there were books, enough and to spare, in the special terms and lingos—and no single-titled work could possibly contain them or compete with them. The specialists know those books—let them use them. But something else remains to be done, and that is to give the serious and curious layman (which, really, means every one of us) a guiding hand, a bit of first aid, into the world's knowledge.

Hear Mr. Ansley: "Since first aid is all that a general encyclopedia can now give successfully, it is all that the 'Columbia Encyclopedia' attempts to give. It contains no technical treatises. It does not try to instruct any specialist in his own specialty. Those who have compiled it have tried to give reliable elementary information in language, as intelligible as that of a newspaper."

And they do that, supremely well. One day, recently, I wanted to know what lithography was, exactly how it worked. Four or five pages of the "Britannica," carefully read, told me a multitude of details from the history of the discovery of the process to the geologic names of the best kinds of stone to use—and though I claim a certain ability to grasp the printed word, I simply came out where I went in. In the "C. E." 30 lines told me precisely what I wanted to know.

There has been no intent here to depreciate the great range and authority of the "Britannica." There has been only recognition that in 99 out of 100 of the sub-divisions of knowledge we are all laymen.

• • • •

IT IS that essentially usable thoroughness which distinguishes the "C. E." Under 50,000 headings, we find the gist of what we are looking for. Especially is the book strong in American topics—from the description of all incorporated places in the country of over 1,000 population (and many of under that) to the recognition of numerous native topics not to be found elsewhere, such as the Conestoga wagon. Biographies are compressed and up-to-date. Bibliographies are lavishly presented. Intelligent cross-references abound. All this gets into a fine, fat, beautifully printed and bound volume because the "C. E." avoids wordiness, leaves maps to the atlas and definitions to the dictionary and illustrations to the thousand and one picture books.

For this finest single-volume encyclopedia in English, if not in the world, the Columbia University Press is to be heartily congratulated. On top of its ample and excellent list, it would seem—I wish I'd said it, but the guip belongs to Christopher Morley—that the C. U. P. runneth over.

Of all the newspaper office legends, the one that has given newspapermen the greatest kick, is the story of the Boston paper that sent out a man to cover a winter fire . . . In covering the story, the reporter was killed in the blazing ruins . . . For years thereafter, the reporter's name was carried on the city desk's daily assignment schedule . . . He had been sent out on an assignment, he had not returned with it, so he was still on assignment . . . And his widow continued to receive his weekly salary check . . . I stumbled on a similar story right in my own backyard today . . . Harry Acton, shipnews reporter for one of the a. m. papers, was assigned to France to cover the launching of one of the bigger boats . . . He died the night before he was to have reached Cherbourg . . . His city desk, however, still carries him on the daily assignment sheet . . . And his widow gets his weekly check.

Notes: The late Mrs. Graham Fair Vanderbilt, before she died, gave $250,000 to Frank Rediker in return for his thoughtful attention to her (she wanted to marry him, but he refused, waiving millions of dollars) . . . Margaret Emerson, the former Mrs. Charles Minot Amory, and British Maj. Cooper seem to be serious (though the witty matron, after her fourth divorce, told friends that she had had all the marriages the public would allow) . . . The E. F. Hutton-Dorothy Metzger, tip, printed in this space Monday, cracked the page 1's 48 hours later . . . Inside tip: Henry Ford either will be the Republican Presidential candidate or he'll name the man who is (Father Coughlin has been conferring with the Detroiter) . . . Englishmen on the movie lots of Hollywood have heard the throbbing war drums of the Empire . . . David Niven and Errol Flynn, reserve officers, have received their notice to be ready to report . . . The final notice is expected any minute . . . Dolly Richards, of the Jules Bache clan, and G. Lowther are building up to a terrific letdown . . . Add sentimental note: Nobody in the Fox Studio has taken the luncheon table at which the late Will Rogers ate his meals . . . The Arthur Loews may reconcile, now that she's learned he was escorting his sister-in-law, not his former wife.

Lee Tracy came back to a Broadway stage Tuesday night . . . It was the first time the Stem had seen him in a legitimate play since January, 1932, when "Louder Please" folded at the Masque Theater . . . Tracy, back to the stage after a series of hectic adventures in Hollywood, turned in a grand job as the Quin Hanna of Arthur Hopkins' "Bright Star" . . . It's interesting to watch the stage troupers when they return to their first love . . . No matter how long their absence, their sense of timing is amazingly keen . . . Once he "felt" the pace of the audience, Tracy galloped along, a fire horse returned to engine harness after pasturing in celluloid clover . . . The Stem trusts that Tracy, having liquidated his "Viva Villa" adventure, will remain on Broadway because the theater really can use him.

Gladys George and "Personal Appearance" celebrate their anniversary at the Henry Miller . . . Averaging the weekly gross at $12,000 for the year, the Brock Pemberton play has attracted $600,000 and netted all concerned a sizeable fortune . . . Miss George even got herself a new husband . . . But what bothers the Stemmers is this: Pemberton has just sold the Scandinavian and Holland rights . . . the play's last line is a furious one-line outburst of profanity . . . Broadway wonders idly if the Scandinavians have a word for it.

Col. Roscoe Turner brings back a story from the Midwest that is silly enough to rate inclusion in a Broadway column . . . Putting up at a hotel for the night, Turner unpacked his tiny radio set and prepared to settle down in bed and read the papers . . . He called the room clerk on the phone before plugging in his radio and asked: "Have you AC current or DC current at this hotel?" . . . "Just a moment, sir," said the clerk politely . . . A few moments later, Turner was flabbergasted at the answer: "Sorry, Col. Turner," said the clerk, "neither Mr. Current or his brother are registered with us."

One Husk O'Hare, Baltimore band leader, wires me that he rates attention because he uses actual sound effects for his musical broadcasts. He lists 'em—striking of real matches for "Two Cigarettes," clinking of real glasses in "Cocktails for Two," etc. . . . Probably the Siamese Twins read the commercial when he plays "Double Trouble."

G. C. Berryman Dies At Home in Linden

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Front Royal, Va., Oct. 17.—George C. Berryman, Linden merchant, 51, was found dead of heart failure in his home today. He was a native of Linden, the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Berryman. For a number of years he was a member of the Washington (D. C.) Fire Department, but he returned to Linden about six years ago and engaged in merchandizing. He was unmarried and is survived by an aunt, Miss Gertrude Berryman, of Linden, and other more-distant relatives. Funeral services will be held on Saturday.

Fine Umbrellas Shown in Many Ornate Designs

Cocktail Trays Exhibited at F Street Store Make Ideal Gifts.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

HAD SOLOMON gone on a shopping spree with the Queen of Sheba in mind, it's ten to one he would have given considerable thought, and finally succumbed to one of the grand and glorious umbrellas shown in a downtown store.

Talk about luxurious creations, about fascinating tricks of designing and color blending, well, here they are right here in these little umbrellas. Nothing short of an artist's brush could do them descriptive justice. Gorgeous crystal, ebony and ivory balls on top. A whole kennel of dogs' heads carved on the elegant handles. Mind you, one of these ornate ends actually conceals a two-way compact.

Although these jaunty rainsticks were made to sell at prices up to $25, they are being offered at a sum that would barely cover the cost of recovering your old frame in a good quality of silk.

Gift Suggestion.

THE HOSTESS who is remembered for her unusual parties is always alert for novel touches. She'll find that cocktails have twice their kick if they are served from the fighting cock tray shown in an F street store.

This tray and several others in the same design are real works of art, and needless to say would make delightful gifts. Butterflies and the plumage from birds go into their making.

Attractive boxes and lampshades are available in this same interesting artwork.

Bargains in Dresses.

SOME OF YOU with the harder-to-fit figures are going around in last year's duds because you dread the extra cost of having new dresses altered.

And no wonder, by time you've picked up a real bargain frock and had it taken in here, and let out there, the bargain aspect vanishes.

Not so, however, in a little downtown shop. Here you'll find the most fascinating clothes, and alterations free of charge!

There's another pleasing aspect, too. You'll find no old stock. The New York house that supplies the buyer picks everything up that isn't sold in a few days and rushes in new stock. As a result, you may shop here every week for a month and find dresses you haven't seen before.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 323, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

A LADY'S CONCERN over the color of her sofa and the pattern in her rug isn't just a matter of making the house look pretty. Her job is to provide the kind of a place that the family will look upon as sanctuary from a busy demanding world outside. The color of the sofa and the pattern in the rug are simply details in creating this kind of a background.

• • • •

T. B. C. WRITES: My living room is going to be repainted. The sofa is in rep—a soft gray green. One chair is in blocked linen—a cream ground with flowers in browns, rusty reds and greens. The rug is a muted rust shade. Another chair will have to have a new slip cover and I want new draperies. Would you suggest colors for walls, draperies and slip cover? The room is a bit dark. I'd like to give color and zest to it without spending too much. Would flower and bird pictures be all right for the walls?

• • • •

ANSWER: I'd have the walls done in yellow—that is a sunny color and it would be nice with the colors you already have. For the new slip cover, I think I would like a bittersweet linen or crash. For the windows, have glass curtains in yellow, then have draperies with fresh dewy garden colors and green. Bird and flower pictures would be lovely.

Mothers Take Risk in Guess At Baby's Diet

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

HOW THE BABY was to live and grow on the amount of nourish he retained was a mystery to his mother. After every nursing, he regurgitated what looked like his entire meal before he had even begun to digest it.

There are many young mothers who allow their babies to lose meal after meal for weeks under the delusion that what the baby returns is only a surplus which he could not digest. But continual regurgitation is a danger signal and the reason for it should be investigated.

The mother, if it is a breast-fed baby, may be over-tiring herself, her milk may not be rich enough or may be too rich, or the baby may be having gas which causes the trouble. Before a baby is laid down after a feeding, the mother always should be sure that any gas which may have formed has had time and opportunity to escape. Sometimes she can make sure of this by holding the child up against her shoulder and very gently patting his back.

The only way to be sure that the baby gets enough food is to weigh him frequently on accurate scales and always on the same scales. If his gain is not satisfactory, a doctor should be consulted.

Haphazard methods or following nature will not work. To keep a baby well and strong and to build up bone and make him grow, require correct and careful feeding.

Katharine Cornell Is Eager to Portray Cleopatra; Role Never Interpreted Correctly, She Thinks

Admits Her "Juliet" Will Be Better When She Plays Role Longer.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

THE MINUTE you see Katharine Cornell you like her. From the time she starts talking until you walk out of her dressing room, while she dons her Juliet costume, you hang on every word of her wit and wisdom.

You like the way she shakes your hand and then sits down as if she had known you always and goes on about her business of make-up. You watch her as she smears on the grease paint, dusts her broad cheeks with powder, rubs cream on the lids of her wide brown eyes and draws a comb through her dark bobbed hair.

As you listen, she talks of many things—the early steps in her career, her current role, goals for the future, stage prerequisites, people and problems; but mostly of the two dachshunds, reclining on the couch behind her, blinking, wondering what it's all about.

You're soon convinced here is a mature woman who can indulge in whimsicality without being kittenish about it. Whether you're one of those women who can abide a lap dog makes no difference. You like a homely hound or anything else that appeals to this vital, vivid, first lady of the theater.

Illo Demands Attention.

Thus, though you came to learn more about the lady, you listen with more than passing interest while she discusses dachshunds and another dog. "One is named Illo; the other, Sonya," she explains. "Where I go, they go, too. As a rule, I also bring Flush along. But when I came on this tour, Flush said he was tired and wanted to go to the country for a good rest." So that's where one of the principals in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" may be found the next six weeks.

At this point, probably because Flush is up for discussion, Illo demands attention. He wiggles down off the couch where Sonya is sleeping, waddles over toward his mistress and licks one of the red slippers she is to wear as "Juliet." She grins, asks him kindly not to eat her shoe, and finally draws him up to her lap by the skin of his neck—which obviously was what he was angling for at first.

With one dog disposed of, and the other still dozing, Miss Cornell evinces a few ideas about Shakespeare's heroine whose part she will play 15 minutes after the interview ends.

In her opinion Juliet was a glowing person, who knew her mind and what she wanted, who realized from the first her romance might end in the grave. "She wasn't a vague dreamer, blown to destruction by a swift breeze of passion," Miss Cornell said. Then she modestly admitted her own interpretation of the 14-year-old daughter of Capulet wasn't quite what she wanted it to be—yet. "I have hopes it will be before the season's over," she went on, "because it seems to improve. But it's a difficult role. Still, there's one advantage about it. The audience is fond of Juliet, is in sympathy with her before she ever comes on the stage. That helps."

KATHARINE CORNELL, with her dachshunds, Illo and Sonya, who go wherever their mistress goes, whether it's on the road with a play, or abroad for a vacation.

She hopes some day to do Cleopatra, because she believes "the Egyptian Queen has never been played true to type. She has always been portrayed as a vampire, when she was really a highly imaginative, keenly intelligent woman with an insatiable thirst for power. Passion was her pawn, rather than her chief concern. Even her affairs with Caesar and Antony were incidental to her ambition."

Mentioning some of the roles she has played, and describing some of the steps in her career, she revealed she made her official stage debut in a four-word part in "Bushido." "I simply walked on the stage once and uttered the line, 'My son, my son!' but it was one of my most thrilling experiences."

Then she waited and worked five years for her next appearance on the metropolitan stage, despite the fact that at the time of her first appearance William Faversham had tried to engage her as his leading woman.

Her greatest thrill to date had to do with her second appearance on the Metropolitan stage. She had agreed to play Marcelle in a stock company production of "The Man Who Came Back." Waiting to listen in on a rehearsal of a troupe appearing in an uptown theater in New York, she learned the lines of the leading role before the first performance. She was sitting on the stage during the brief recess for luncheon when the stage director told her he was having trouble with the leading lady and asked her if she could appear in the role. The only line she still remembers from that part now is the bromide, "Opportunity knocks but once! Opportunity knocks but once!"

Background Advocated.

Contrary to the popular idea that girls with stardust in their eyes should begin stage work early, Miss Cornell believes it is better to stay off the stage long enough to gain a broader view of life, to learn about a great many things that have nothing to do with the theater, and a great many more that pertain to the history of the stage, costume design, direction, literature, music and art.

Spoke Only Four Words in Her First Official Stage Appearance.

Discussing advice she gives stage-struck girls, she mentioned, "Many of them want big roles before they're worthy of them. In the theater, as in any line of work, it's not getting to the top that counts, but being worthy of getting there. If through some whim of chance an actress becomes a star before she's ready, something always happens to bring her down the ladder faster than she went up, and she has a double chance of being swallowed by oblivion."

But if one builds slowly . . . slowly . . . perhaps beginning with "walk-on" parts, then gradually working into better roles, studying, struggling and observing in the meantime, Miss Cornell believes starring parts come as a matter of course, "provided, of course, one has some talent to begin with."

"But even when big roles materialize, the work is not finished," she said. "You must work harder than ever to continue developing, to prepare yourself for finer, more difficult, more artistic roles than you've had before. Thus, attaining one goal, you glimpse another further on. So it goes. The work is never finished. Few actress can honestly say, I have attained my ambition. Now I can rest.' Most of us want to go on . . . and on . . . as long as there are new worlds to conquer; and there always will be."

Yet absorbing as she may find her career, an actress can also be happily married. Of this Miss Cornell is convinced "because I've been married to the same man 14 years," she said smiling, "and we still like each other." Her husband is Guthrie McClintic, widely known stage director.

Dental Trouble Is One Penalty Of Easy Living

THERE are many penalties attached to civilization. We live in houses, eat tasty food, and surround ourselves with an increasing number of labor saving devices, conveniences, and comforts. One of the penalties of easy living is tooth decay. It has been called "the disease of civilization."

The teeth of prehistoric man, insofar as they have been preserved, show but few indications of destruction by disease. In Britain, however, follwing the Roman invasion, dental decay became more manifest, and the twentieth century has shown a very high incidence among children in the British Isles.

For many years it was thought that the premature decay of teeth was due to a single factor, namely, the formation of lactic acid through the fermentation of starches and sugars within the mouth. Unfortunately for this contention thousands of foul mouths loaded with bacteria showed no evidences whatever of tooth destruction. Furthermore, it was difficult to explain why one tooth would give way, whereas its neighbor remained intact.

Diet Always Plays Part.

The present day theories as to causes include failure of saliva (quantity or composition), dietary deficiencies, heredity, structural faults, bacterial invasion, endocrine disturbances, and many others. Diet evidently plays a part and a food regime that increases acid in the mouth is bound to be followed by tooth impairment.

Probably many factors that have to do with the laying down of the permanent tooth structure may be changed during childhood or adult life. For example, though teeth are normally and perfectly formed the absence of important vitamins in the diet may be followed by an improper balance between calcium and phosphorus. In fact, by experimentally upsetting this salt balance in animals tooth decay may be induced. If diets are deficient in mineral salts (calcium and phosphorus), we can readily understand how teeth may be drawn upon for supplies of these substances which are needed elsewhere in the body. In other words, bony structures (teeth included), wherever they may exist in the body, are reservoirs of needed salts. The blood demands that it be kept supplied with an adequate amount of these elements and it takes them as occasion may demand from all possible sources.

How can we prevent dental decay? first, by maintaining good health. This should start with the mother, before the child is born. The program laid down for her should provide sufficient calcium so that the drain from her bones occasioned by the rapidly growing fetus will be prevented. We must exercise alertness to the end that plenty of green foods, milk, butter, eggs, fresh fruit, sunlight and cod liver oil enter the picture for both the mother and the developing child.

Cosmetics Called Factor in Divorce

Often Prevent Separations, Dinner Speaker Says.

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—Many a divorce has been prevented by the proper and timely use of cosmetics by the woman in the case, Samuel L. Antonow said in a talk before a dinner of representatives of the American cosmetic industry, gathered in observance of National Perfume and Cosmetic Week.

"There is no question that cosmetics are a decided factor in reducing the number of divorces," said Mr. Antonow, who is president of many well-known cosmetic houses. "The judge of every domestic relations court can testify to cases in which the use of cosmetics either has or could have saved the situation. Men in this day and age are coming more in contact with young women in business, young women who are carefully groomed and attractive to the eye. The smart woman who is a homemaker will keep this in mind and see to it that at least a portion of her time is given to personal adornment, so that her husband is not forced to conclude that she is less attractive than the young women in his office or store."

Five Prizes of $1 Will Be Awarded In Weekly Contest

WOULD YOU like to win a beautiful hand carved and gaily colored wooden salad bowl with matching wooden serving spoon and fork, an attractive chromium and porcelain combination cake server and box, or a Dutch oven? Then submit your best cake recipe to Dorothea Duncan in care of The Washington Post.

Five prizes of $1 each will be awarded to the five persons submitting the best cake recipes. If you win one of these weekly prizes your recipe will be entered in the final judging for the three grand prizes.

This is the first of a series of recipe contests conducted by The Post. Each week for six weeks there will be a new recipe contest and at the close of this series all the weekly prize winning recipes will be judged for the final awards.

Start immediately to place your recipe on the eligible list for the grand prizes. Post your first contest entry so it will reach this office not later than Saturday morning.

Results of this week's contest will be printed on next Tuesday's food page, and the new contest subject will be announced at the same time.

Graduates Finding Jobs, Report Shows

WHERE JOBS come from nobody seems to know, but graduates are finding employment in increasing numbers, judging by a recent report of Dean Roswell C. McCrea, of the Columbia University School of Business.

Recently he filed a statistical report to the effect that 71 per cent of the 108 students, graduated last June, have obtained employment. Of the remaining number only 8 per cent are definitely known to be unemployed.

Ideal Marriage Factors Sought In National Poll

Views Will Be Sounded in Survey to Be Taken Within 3 Months.

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—Marriage the family and the home—the three dominant spheres of woman's interest and influence—have just entered the national voting arena for the first time. A Nation-wide poll is to be taken during the next three months to determine the generally accepted opinion on what constitutes ideal marriage, it is announced here by the Bernarr Macfadden Foundation, sponsor of the survey.

The poll will be conducted through a questionnaire prepared by prominent educators and sociologists.

Among some of the major questions propounded in the survey are: What is the best age for marriage? Do children make for more happy marriage? Would extension of birth control knowledge help in making marriages more successful? Would more liberal and universal divorce laws make for more happy and successful marriage?

Results of the poll are expected to prove of wide sociological significance.

Pig Tails Pickled.

Kitchener, Ont. (U.P.).—A new use for pigs' tails has been found by Kitchener citizens. They roast or pickle them and take them to picnics. The demand was so great this summer that packing houses had trouble in filling all orders.

Correct Accessories Vital for Men's Wardrobes; Neckwear Sale Offers Choice of Fabrics, Colors

Muffler of Crocheted Silk Is Attractive and Warm.

By John Q. Alexander.

IN MEN'S CLOTHES, as in kindergartens, it's the little things that count. Granting the importance of well-cut, becoming suits and topcoats, the best of these can be ruined by the wrong tie, and a muffler which shrieks with color worn with a formal o'coat will never do much to bring out the Gable in you.

If you're in need of a few new ties (as who isn't?) don't wait for Christmas to bring you Aunt Minnie's monstrosities. There's a current sale of neckwear that is really sensational. You'll find repps, twills, satins, morres, charvets and others, in stripes, plaids, all-over designs and plain colors. Thousands of ties—literally—and the fabrics are exceptionally good. A fine new tie will do much to point up your wardrobe, and these are only 69 cents.

The same store has a new muffler which is a knockout. It is crocheted silk, in a rough stitch, and double thickness for warmth. About 8 inches wide with fringed ends, available in white, Navy blue or canary yellow. If you seek the touch elegant, here it is, $5.

Another establishment has an outstanding assortment of plaid wool mufflers, of which there will be a predominance in the grandstands this season. These come in all color combinations, are soft as a minister's words and will turn away the wrath of the winds very nicely. Self-fringed, $3.50. Or, if you like, you can get string knit mufflers, long and narrow, which are smart and practical and may be had to match your string gloves. These cost $1.50, available in tan, buff, yellow, chamois, white and other colors.

As for gloves—the brand new Mocha in soft chocolate brown is much in favor in New York, and is taking hold here as well. It is conservatively cut, available with plain or embroidered back, with one-button fastening. The leather is warm and pliable, cleans easily and would combine well with any clothes of autumn colors—particularly the rough brown hats and brown bucko shoes which are so much in evidence. Good for business and sports wear, $4.

Getting down to the bottom of things, we should like to mention a new type of underwear. It's a sort of moderation or winter version of the French or jockey short which appeared during the summer. It is knit, of course, which spells comfort, and knit well, which means no binding, pulling or bunching in far-off places.

Gabardine, which hovered fitfully on the fringe of general popularity for several years, is now in a dominant position where fabrics for men's clothes are concerned. Now it appears in a sort of jacket-blouse-windbreaker affair, don't know what you'd call it but it's mighty like a rose. It has a swell collar, which may be turned up, full zipper front, regulation side pockets, and the back is cut just like an ordinary sports jacket, with easy-swing shoulder, half-belt and the new side-vents.

Gabardine, as you probably know, is unexcelled for durability, strength of construction and resistance against wind and rain. This article is good-looking, smart and can't be beat for golf, fishing and other outdoor recreations. Good for school wear, too, with odd slacks. $25.

Mr. Alexander's articles, written exclusively for The Post, appear on this page each Friday. For information on men's fashions, or for the names of shops carrying the above-mentioned merchandise, call National 4200, branch 323. Or write, inclosing self-addressed, stamped envelope for reply.

Old Gold Mines To Be Visited By Hiking Club

Wanderbirds Will Explore Tunnels in Great Falls Vicinity Tomorrow.

By Robert Shostek.

Boyhood dreams of exploring the mysterious tunnels of old gold mines will come true Sunday when members of the Wanderbirds Hiking Club and their friends visit the largest of the gold mines in the vicinity of Great Falls, Md. According to old-timers the two largest shafts were dug about 1866 and 1905, and are still accessible through several side entries and by a 250-foot vertical shaft.

Readers of The Post and club members planning to go on this 7-mile hike will meet in front of The Post Building at 10 a. m. Buses will take the group to a crossing on the Falls road near the burnt St. Gabriel's Church. Reservations must be made in advance at National 4200 and the round-trip fare will be 50 cents. Bring lunch, a cup for water, and a flashlight if you intend to explore the mine.

Machinery Still In Place.

The route follows a dirt road west of the old church to a farmhouse, thence through a field and along the edge of a woods. Scores of large pits along outcropping quartz veins mark the places where prospectors vainly sought gold in paying quantities. The trail enters the woods and we reach two main shafts several hundred yards downhill. The rusted hoisting machinery is still in place, just as it was left in 1916 when the mine was deserted. It is possible to descend either shaft by means of a long rope. At least one side entry is open down the valley on the right side of the stream, near the grayed, weather-beaten bunkhouses. In these tunnels the writer has found iron pyrites, talcite and little brown bats in hibernation.

The hikers depart down the valley to the trail along the canal which is followed to Great Falls, where the group will lunch. We follow the towpath to Lock 15, crossing over to the old dirt road which leads to the Anglers Club. This road, high above the canal offers a fine view of Widewater, as well as glimpses of the Potomac gorge.

Nature-Guide Walk.

At the Anglers Club the group will recross to the towpath which is followed as far as the Carderock Bridge. The buses will await us at the far end of the bridge.

Sunday's Nature-Guide Walk, under the auspices of the National Park Service, starts from Stop 30 on the Glen Echo carline at 2 and 3:30 p. m. The route of the hike is along the towpath. The regular campfire program will be held tonight at Pierce Mill in Rock Creek Park. The P. A. T. C. offers Wanderbirds a reduction in the price of its guide to the Blue Ridge. For $2.50 (regular $3.25) you can get the trail guide and the recently published supplement. Hikers who want these two books should leave their order—no money—with the Wanderbirds Hiking Club, care of The Post.

D. C. Doctor Is Sued For $120,000 Damages

Alleging she had been unable to walk since she was administered a spinal anesthetic by Dr. Edmund Horgan four years ago, Mrs. Ethel Palmer, 3711 Baker street, Mount Rainier, Md., was brought into the District Supreme Court yesterday on a rolling bed to tell how, during an illness, she lost control of her left leg and eventually became totally an invalid.

Mrs. Palmer, whose case is being tried by Justice Peyton Gordon, asked for $100,000 and her husband, James, asked $20,000 compensation. The case will not be concluded for two more days, attorneys said. Charles S. Baker represents the physician and Minor Hudson is acting for Mrs. Palmer.

Woodside Man Takes Life by Inhaling Gas

Harry Sargeant, 50, stereotyper, ended his life late yesterday by inhaling gas in the kitchen of his home, 8907 Second avenue, Woodside, Md.

A roomer found him beside the stove, his head covered with a rug. Gas hissed from two open jets. The Silver Spring Rescue Squad made a futile attempt to revive him.

Harry Sargeant, jr., son of the dead man, said his father had been despondent because of ill health. Sargeant also is survived by his widow and a daughter.

Culbertson On Bridge

Crack Them.

This actually happened in a recent major tournament: The dealer was a woman who has the misfortune to be rather deaf. She loudly bid "one heart," and when all the other players passed she promptly doubled, in the same stentorian tones. Whereupon her partner turned to the opponent at the left and said, hastily: "You'd better pass in a hurry or she'll redouble herself into game."

Now, whatever else may be said for her, she demonstrated one quality which warms the cockles of my heart. She wasn't going to pass up any chances for a juicy penalty double, in which she differed from the vast majority of players. For some strange reason this point eludes them, particularly doubles of low level contracts which usually produce the biggest penalties. They miss thousands of easily won points by driving ahead with no trump and suit bids of their own when a snappy double would mean big profits, not to mention the transfer of the headaches from their own to the opponents' side of the table.

Yet the whole system of contract bidding is founded on penalty doubles. Bridge is a game of points and sound doubles pile up the points faster and in larger quantities than any other source of supply. What does the honor trick table—the first point to be learned in bidding—offer? The defensive value of high cards. What does an opening bid reveal? The definite possession of at least 2½ defensive tricks. The moment such a bid is overcalled the first thought of the opener's partner is, or should be: "Can I now insert a profitable double, knowing my partner's minimum strength?" The game-going possibilities of the partnership are the secondary, for the first, considerations.

Injustice.

It usually is a comforting thought that in bridge a player wins just what he deserves to win. If he plays well he finishes on top, and if he plays badly he loses. Sometimes, of course, bad play or overbidding prove, by some lucky accident, to be profitable, as it was for North in this deal.

NORTH
♠ K 10 6
♥ A 8
♦ A Q 8 6 4
♣ 7 4 3

WEST
♠ None
♥ 9 7 6 3 2
♦ K J 9 2
♣ 9 6 5 2

EAST
♠ Q J 7 4 3
♥ 10 5 4
♦ 10 5
♣ K J 8

SOUTH
♠ A 9 8 5 2
♥ K Q J
♣ A Q 10

The bidding (both sides vulnerable):

South	West	North	East
1 Sp.	Pass	2 Di.	Pass
2 N. T.	Pass	3 Sp.	Pass
4 Sp.	Pass	4 N.T.(1)	Pass
5 N.T.(2)	Pass	6 Sp.	Dbl.
Redouble [final bid].

1. North felt, correctly, that he had previously underbid his hand. He did not realize that an early error seldom can be corrected.

2. With two aces, five no trump is an obligatory response to a forcing four no trump bid.

West opened the three of hearts. South won with the jack and led the deuce of spades to dummy's king. Learning that East had all five spades, he played the ten from dummy, East covered with the jack, and south took the spade ace. Then South led a diamond and finessed the queen. It won, and the spade six was dummy's next lead. East playing low. The six held the trick. The next lead from dummy was a club. East played the eight and South won by finessing the ten. South's nine of spades fell to East's queen, and on a club lead from East, South won with the club queen. He drew the last trump with the spade eight, and won the remaining tricks with the ace and king of hearts, and the aces of diamonds and clubs. Making six spades, redoubled and vulnerable, he scored 1,970 points, because North bid badly.

Today's Question.

Question: How strong a suit must you have to make a forcing two bid?

Answer: If the hand, as a whole, is strong enough, you may make a two bid in any four card biddable suit. To make sure of the strength of the hand, be sure that it contains more honor tricks than losing cards. For example, bid two spades with: K J 6 5 A Q 10 7 A K Q A K

On The Air Today

C. B. S. has awarded its medal for distinguished service radio—the seventh award of its kind—to Dr. William C. Bagley, professor of education at Teachers College, Columbia University. Dr. Bagley is chairman of the board of consultants for C. B. S.'s "American School of the Air."

The medal will be presented Monday night over the CBS network. William S. Paley, president, will make the presentation, and from Washington, through WJSV, John W. Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education, will be presented.

N. B. C. and Columbia combine network facilities next week to bring the first of the series of Mobilization for Human Needs programs to the American people. President Roosevelt will open the drive Thursday, speaking from the White House. The Detroit Symphony and a mixed chorus of 550 voices will be heard. Former President Hoover will speak on the final program November 12. Details of the second and third programs have not been announced.

Tonight's Post Spelling Bee should prove to be a humdinger, as we say out in Indiana. The two teams have been recruited from Washington business colleges, where spelling is one of the principal subjects on the curriculum. On the Woods team will be Margaret Herbert, Josephine Western, Betariz Coles, Frances Robinson, Amy Crowder, Lucille, Ryalles, Faye Sinclair and William MacIntosh. On the Poteet team will be Hazel Eastman, Mrs. L. M. Bryan, Mrs. Marian D. Smith, Hina Schuler, Rhea King, H. E. Lehman, H. T. Dixon and Robert Wayland.

• • • •

In response to many inquiries from persons who want a place on one of the Friday night spelling bee teams, The Post has not provided for individual applications due to the inability to gauge the talents of the applicants. Teams should be well-balanced in spelling ability to make a good bee. However, any person is welcome to form a team of eight and enter it in a Friday night bee. In such event, the captain should outline his team's qualifications so proper opposition can be matched.

Maryland Is Airing State Police Charge

'Favoritism' to Democrat Magistrate Alleged.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Oct. 17.—An investigation of reports that State police had shown discrimination in taking violators before a Democratic magistrate instead of a nearer Republican magistrate was undertaken today.

Major Enoch Barton Garey, superintendent of State police, said he had one of his "ablest" men tracking down the accusations made last night at a meeting of the Philadelphia Road Association.

"The man who made the complaint," Maj. Garey said, "said that discrimination was being shown by the members of my department in taking cases before Magistrate Julius Requardt, a Democrat, instead of the nearer Republican magistrates, George Kappen, of Rossville, and Carl Mohr, of Ridge road."

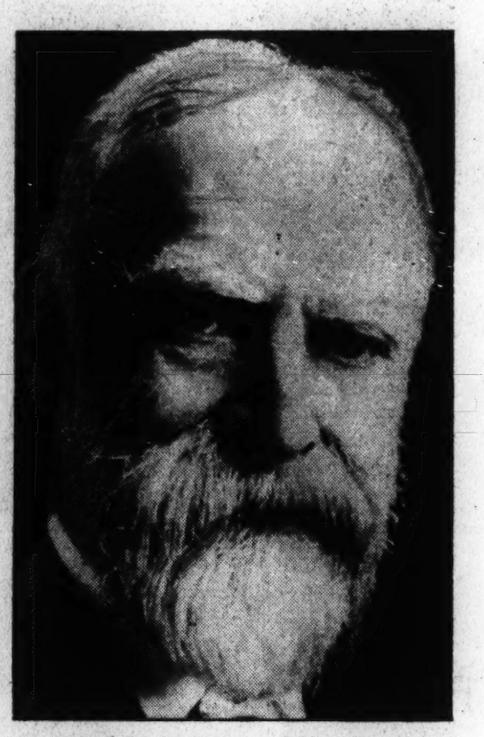
THE WASHINGTON POST PRESENTS

AMERICA SPEAKS

The National Weekly Poll Of Public Opinion



A final "stage in the evolution of government by opinion would be reached if the will of the majority of citizens were to become ascertainable at all times."—The American Commonwealth.
1891 —JAMES BRYCE

STATESMEN and writers like Woodrow Wilson, Theodore Roosevelt, James Bryce and Walter Lippmann for years have expressed the need of machinery capable of measuring Public Opinion.

And now, in 1935, the American Institute of Public Opinion:—

Solves the problem stated by Lord Bryce in 1891,

Devises a practical method of putting into effect Theodore Roosevelt's political philosophy of 1908,

Furnishes the guiding facts asked for by Woodrow Wilson in 1911,

Invents, creates and organizes the machinery of knowledge desired by Walter Lippmann in 1922.

The Washington Post takes pride in announcing this new journalistic enterprise for making public opinion articulate. Included in the list of papers in which AMERICA SPEAKS appears, are Republican, Democratic and Independent newspapers which have set aside party alignments to unite in a non-partisan contribution to representative government.

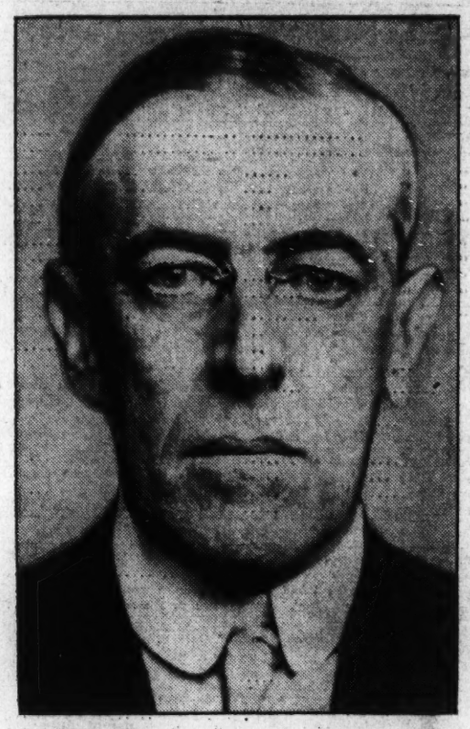
The American Institute of Public Opinion, which sponsors these weekly polls, is a fact-finding organization founded for the purpose of determining what the mass of voters are thinking about major issues of the day. Thousands of mailed ballots and personal interviews are used weekly to sound public opinion in cities, towns, villages and cross-road hamlets. AMERICA SPEAKS will present not only the current status of the public mind but also the trends in public opinion, the degree of change in that opinion, and the direction of change.

At monthly intervals AMERICA SPEAKS will present "The National Political Barometer" which will chart the change in strength of the two major parties as well as the standing of any third party.

On other Sundays AMERICA SPEAKS will report the exact sentiment of the nation's voters on important questions and political issues like War; Government Regulation of Business, Industry and Public Utility Holding Companies; Farm Policies; the Tariff.

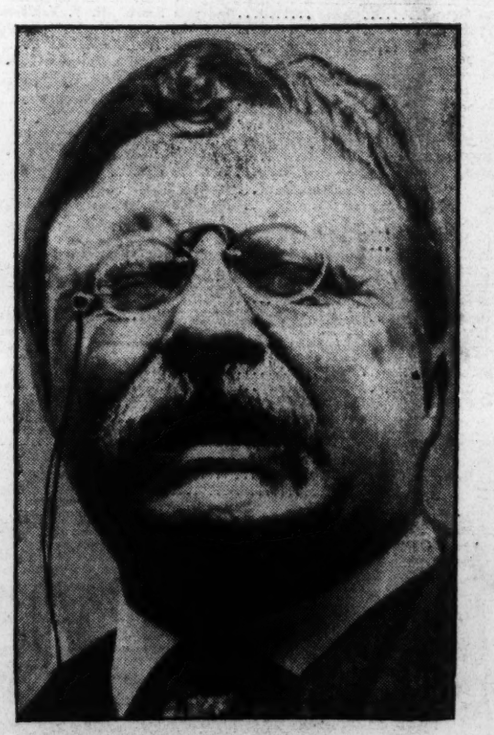
When Congress is debating an issue such as the Bonus, New Taxes, or Curbing the Power of the Supreme Court, American voters will be asked to indicate their opinion on these same questions.

You will not want to miss AMERICA SPEAKS. It appears every Sunday, exclusively in The Washington Post. Phone NA. 4200 and order The Sunday Post delivered to your home regularly.



"I would rather hear what men are talking about on trains and in the shops and by the firesides than hear anything else, because I want guidance and I know I could get it there."
1911 —WOODROW WILSON

"... the troubles of representative government go back ... to the failure of self-governing people to transcend their casual experience and their prejudice by inventing, creating and organizing a machinery of knowledge."—Public Opinion.
1922 —WALTER LIPPMANN



"I believe the majority of the plain people will day in and day out make fewer mistakes in governing themselves than any smaller class or body of men will make in trying to govern them."

Appeal Court Favors Trial For Coblentz

Former Head of Central Trust Must Face Fraud Charge.

Judge Sloan Qualified in Review of Case, Judges Find.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 17.—Emory L. Coblentz, former president of the defunct Central Trust Co., of Maryland, must face a charge of fraudulent corporate misrepresentation in Baltimore, the Maryland Court of Appeals decreed today.

Chief Judge Carroll T. Bond, rendering the court opinion, overruled a motion submitted by Defense Attorney Leo Weinberg, of Frederick, on August 7, which requested the judicial body to vacate its July 12 decision compelling Coblentz to face trial in Baltimore.

The appellant's attorney claimed that Judge D. Lindley Sloan, who handed down the decision on July 12, was disqualified to review the case and with an equal division of opinion of the remaining qualified judges, the judgment of the lower court in the appellant's favor would stand affirmed.

Claimed Sloan Disqualified.

The motion filed by Weinberg claimed that Judge Sloan was disqualified to sit in the case because he had participated in a previous trial in the Allegany Circuit Court. The Appellate Court's opinion on July 12, written by Judge Sloan, reversed the Baltimore Criminal Court's decision, which had upheld a plea of res judicata resulting from Coblentz's acquittal in the Frederick County Circuit Court on bank-failure charges.

Judge Bond in overruling the defense motion said: "The objection is based on the constitutional provision that 'the judge who heard the case below shall not participate in the decision.' But this is not a case in which Judge Sloan sat below, and on this appeal the court has nothing to do with the ultimate finding of the facts in the case.

Discusses Decision.

"In the first of the appellant's cases to be tried and to be brought before this court, Judge Sloan, in Cumberland, sat as one of the triers of fact without a jury and he, accordingly, took no part in the hearing and the decision of the case on appeal. That case was upon an indictment found originally in Howard County on charges of acepting a deposit of money in a banking institution known by the accused to be insolvent.

"The present motion states that on the trial the judges found against the defendant questions of fact, similar to questions which would have hereafter to be decided in this case upon a trial. The present case, on third indictment, was not one with which Judge Sloan had any connection below, and on a charge of violating a different statute. There is clearly no disqualification in Judge Sloan taking part now in the review of the decision of the criminal court of Baltimore on the question of res judicata passed before it."

Police Hear Story Of Hanging Threat

Suicide Case Reopened by Frederick Officers.

By the Associated Press.

Frederick, Md., Oct. 17.—A former State hospital inmate was jailed here today after allegedly attempting to hang Ernest Lane, colored.

Lane's story to police caused reopening of the case of Pepe Robinson, colored, whose body was found hanging from a tree last summer. A suicide verdict was returned at the time.

Lane told officers William Proctor, colored, had attempted to place a noose around his neck and had shouted: "I'll hang you the same as I did Pepe Robinson."

State's Attorney Sherman P. Bowers planned to confer Saturday with judges of the Circuit Court, with the possibility looming the recommittal of Proctor to Crownsville State Hospital would be sought.

On grounds of insanity, Proctor was acquitted five years ago of the murder of Constanpinos Gianelos, 64-year-old Greek, who was beaten to death with a piece of piping. Proctor was released from the hospital two years later.

W. & M. to Honor Old Bell Ringer

By the Associated Press.

Williamsburg, Va., Oct. 17.—Henry "Doc" Billup's ecclesiastical-toned bell, smashing through icy air of winter morns and the balmy breezes of spring, has called William and Mary College students to classes and meetings for 45 years.

Some person of statistical bent has figured that his dusky hands have tugged at the bell rope 130,000 times since he came to the college in 1888, the year the late Dr. Lyon G. Tyler assumed the presidency. Such a period of service has given "Doc" as much of a collegiate tradition as the Lord Botetourt Statue.

As a token of long service, he will receive a gold watch, a chain and bell at a special ceremony in Phi Beta Kappa Hall after the William and Mary-Virginia Military Institute football game homecoming day, November 2.

350 Democrats Are Expected At Gathering

First District Clubs to Meet at Tappahannock Tomorrow.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., Oct. 17.—Young Democrats from the First Congressional District will gather at Tappahannock Saturday for an afternoon and evening of dining, dancing and business. The occasion will be the First District's first assembly of Young Democrats, a sectional get-together convention, and it is expected to attract more than 350.

Prominent Virginians, including many members of the General Assembly, will attend.

The convention, the first of its kind called since the recent State gathering at Richmond, will meet in the new auditorium of Tappanhannock High School. A dinner for Young Democrats will be held at the Riverside Hotel, to be followed by dancing at the Trianon ballroom.

Sinclair Phillips, of Newport News, chairman of the First District clubs, will preside at the convention session and the keynote address will be delivered by Maitland Bustard, of Danville, a member of the House of Delegates for several years. He will be introduced by John T. Duvall, House Delegate from Gloucester and Matthews counties.

The address of welcome will be made by Gordon Lewis, president of the Essex Young Democrats. State Senator Robert O. Norris, of Lancaster, will introduce the distinguished guests. The secretary's report will be presented by Mrs. R. A. Hicks, of Port Royal. Committee reports, selection of a place for the next convention, and election of officers to fill vacancies are other scheduled events.

State Senator William A. Wright, of Tappahannock, will serve as toastmaster at the banquet. John Galleher, of Leesburg, president of the State organization; Mrs. Galleher, national vice president, and John Currie, of Richmond, executive secretary, are expected to attend.

Winchester Faces WPA Project Loss

Dearth of Relief Labor May Wreck Airport Plan.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., Oct. 17.—A grant of more than $4,000 approved by the WPA for development of a municipal airport here may go begging for lack of relief labor.

With two projects definitely approved, the outlook is that there will be a shortage of relief labor if either is begun before the apple harvest ends. At the close of the harvest, practically all the able-bodied men will be able to find work, it is believed, either on installation of storm sewers or on street and road jobs.

City Manager Field has informed A. H. Pettigrew that it is doubtful if the work can be undertaken as a relief project for these reasons.

Construction of an armory was recently voted by the council as a third project on which relief labor must be used.

Thomas E. Fleming.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Grafton, W. Va., Oct. 17.—Funeral services were held at St. Augustine's Catholic Church today for Thomas E. Fleming, 74, a retired Baltimore & Ohio Railroad engineer.

Surviving are the widow, one brother, Michael J. Fleming, Cumberland, Md., and three sisters, Margaret, Mary and Sabina Fleming, all of Newburg, W. Va.

Chief of Police Explains Row With Alderman

Says Order to Make Arrest Contrary to Higherups' Instructions.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., Oct. 17.—Chief of Police Allen S. Bartgis today issued a statement to The Washington Post in which he said he was acting under instructions from Mayor Lloyd C. Culler and State's Attorney Sherman P. Bowers when he refused to comply with an order from Alderman Robert L. Grove to arrest operators of gambling devices and games on the fair grounds here last wek.

The statement came from the police head after Alderman Grove had announced that he has dropped his plan to have Bartgis cited before the police committee for failure to carry out his order to arrest the operator of a dice game.

"I was instructed by the mayor and State's attorney not to bother the operators unless they went too far," Bartgis said today. "I told the operator of the dice game not to open up on Tuesday, two days before he was arrested. If Alderman Grove had not bawled me out in front of a crowd I would have explained my instructions and the controversy would have ben prevented."

Alderman Grove said "we both lost our heads," in explaining the argument.

Shotgun Vigils at Night Guard Virginia Tobacco

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Danville, Va., Oct. 17.—Tobacco growers in Caswell County, incensed over the threft of tobacco from barns, are keeping shotgun vigils these nights. Adolphus Page is the third farmer to lose 400 pounds of good tobacco worth $125. It was taken from his barn on the plantation adjoining that of Steven Poteat, who lost the same amount the night before.

Page said that numerous farmers are sleeping at their pack barns to protect their leaf. "Maybe it will be broken up after they have picked up one or two dead ones," he said.

Civic Leaders Assail Claim Baltimore Has Passed Prime

Resettlement Administration's Decision Not to Experiment with Low-Cost Housing Projects There Arouses Fiery Debate.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Oct. 17.—A suggestion Baltimore had passed its prime had civic leaders up in arms today.

Two emphatically denied the city was becoming stagnant, but a third said he believed the population never would be any larger than it is now.

Their statements were elicited in response to newspaper reports the Federal Resettlement Administration did not care to experiment with low-cost housing projects here on grounds the city had reached the peak of its growth.

Civic Leaders Protest.

G. Harry Pouder, executive vice president of the Baltimore Association of Commerce, and S. Philip Pitt, secretary of the Real Estate Board of Baltimore, both denied emphatically the city had passed its prime.

While he shied away from the term "economic prime," Dr. Ivan E. McDougle, professor of sociology at Goucher College, said the population probably never would grow any larger.

Bringing figures to the city's defense, Pouder said:

"Up to the beginning of the depression, Baltimore had made a better record than most cities in the country for economic progress. From 1909 to 1927 the value of Baltimore's manufactured products increased 270.4 per cent.

Statisticians Assailed.

"Only two cities surpassed Baltimore's record. They were the automobile manufacturing cities, Detroit and Cleveland."

"Do you think that Baltimore has passed its economic prime?" Pitt was asked.

"I do not!" he said. "Those birds in Washington can take statistics and figure out almost anything they want to prove."

It remained for Dr. McDougle to give the proud city a jolt.

"I don't like that phrase 'economic prime,'" he said, "but as far as quantity is concerned, I think Baltimore has reached its prime. We've got to be interested in quality hereafter. All studies that have been made show that."

Benedict Again Heads Refrigeration Group

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Waynesboro, Pa., Oct. 17.—D. Norris Benedict, vice president and general manager of the Frick company here, has been reelected president for the coming year of the Refrigerating Machinery Association at the annual meeting of directors recently at Chicago.

Named on the executive committee of the association was Alvin H. Baer, former sales manager of the Frick plant here, and now vice president of the Carbondale Machine Corporation, at Harrison, N. J.

College to Pay Honor to Nice At Ceremonies

Chestertown Institution to Observe Founder's Day Tomorrow.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Chestertown, Md., Oct. 17.—Gov. Harry W. Nice will receive the honorary degree of doctor of laws at Washington College here Saturday when the Executive will cooperate with Eastern Shore college authorities in celebrating the annual Founder's Day. The Governor has said he will not make a prepared address.

The principal address will be delivered by Dr. Paul H. Musser, professor of English and dean of the college of arts at the University of Pennsylvania. Dr. Gilbert W. Mead, president of the local institution, will preside over the exercises which will include the unveiling of a memorial tablet.

The bronze memorial will bear the names of Ezekiel Foreman Chambers and John Emory, members of the class of 1805, Dr. Mead announced. The former was chairman of the board of visitors and govérnors of the college, United Statss Senator for Maryland and chief judge of the second judicial circuit. John Emory is noted in the history of the Methodist Episcopal Church and was a bishop of that denomination.

In the afternoon a football game between Johns Hopinks University and Washington College teams will be played.

Raiding Officers Find Own Names on Mash

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Luray, Va., Oct. 17.—"For Chief Lucas"—meaning Sheriff E. Lucas; another for "Deputy Chief Fox"—meaning Deputy Sheriff David S. Fox, and another for "Luray Morrison," meaning J. William Morrison, local enforcement officer of the ABC Board. These were the labels found on three barrels of mash in Steam Hollow, Page County, Saturday night.

The mash containers were found by the three officers, who had been "tipped off" as to what they could find if they made a search of "good hiding places" in Steam Hollow. They found things as indicated.

Near where the containers were found, numerous cards were discovered, saying "The Steam Hollow Brewery, Not Incorporated." The officers found about 2,000 gallons of mash and liquor. The still was one of the largest ever seen in Page County.

School Closing Decision Stands DesksRemoved

Officials Order Furniture at Broad Run Taken Out; Strike Continues.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., Oct. 17.—As evidence that they have no intentions of resuming classes in the Broad Run School, scene of a patrons' "strike" against the State board of education's consolidation plan, school officials removed all furniture from the rural schoolhouse as the "strike" entered the sixth week.

Employes under the direction of County Superintendent of Schools Eugene S. Pruitt removed all desks and other furniture and equipment from the building.

Mr. Pruitt said today the school officials have not weakened in their original decision to close the school and transport pupils by bus to Middletown. He also pointed out that the State law says the school officials "shall" consolidate schools whenever they deem it proper.

Parents of 33 former pupils of the school have refused to permit their children to go to Middletown by bus. These children have been meeting with some of the parents at the Broad Run schoolhouse each morning. Ten pupils travel by bus to the Middletown school.

School officials have made no move to enforce the compulsory school attendance law in the Broad Run community, indicating they prefer to permit the parents sufficient time to become reconciled to the new condition.

Old Virginia Dog Market DrawsCrowd

Every Breed and Mixture Represented by 500 Canine Entries.

Mart Started in 1698 to Trade Animals With Indians.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Fredericksburg, Va., Oct. 17.—More than 3,000 visitors from many points in Virginia and nearby States poured into this town today to attend an exhibition and auction of approximately 500 assorted hounds, lap dogs and mongrels, to make the annual revival of Fredericksburg's ancient dog mart the best in the history of the age-old institution.

From the opening at 9:30 a. m., when registration of dogs was begun, dogs, some single, others crated with their brothers and sisters, began to settle down in the city park.

Mart Started in 1698.

The event, inaugurated in 1698, when villagers met Indians for the purpose of trading dogs for whatever the red men had to offer, was opened to all canine types. This afternoon officials of the mart said that practically every breed was represented. Great Danes, Chihuahuas and dachshunds matched marks with dogs of divergent ancestory dragged unwillingly to the park on rope leashes.

During the afternoon, Nate Kinsey, veteran auctioneer of this historic town, the boyhood home of George Washington, began the sale by lifting bidders up to $100 for a sleek pointer. A bench-legged beagle, with saddened disrespect for the occasion, went next for $2.

Burgess in Charge.

Jesse Burgess, official of the Rappahannock Amateur Field Trial Association, was in charge of general arrangements, while the judges in the dog show event were Ford E. Young, of Washington; Mac D. Hart, executive secretary of the Virginia Department of Game and Inland Fisheries, and Emmet R. Colbert, of this city.

Truck Victim Loses $10,000 Damage Suit

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Danville, Va., Oct. 17.—Walter Butts yeserday lost his $10,000 action against the city to recover damages for a broken neck. Butts claimed he was struck by a truck while walking over Fall Creek Bridge.

He claimed the city had laid the flooring of the bridge longitudinally and had placed a preservative on the wood which made it impossible to control automobiles passing over the bridge after rain.

Mrs. Beller, Mrs. Guyer, Mrs. Masten Win Club Golf Crowns

Fourth Title Is at Stake Today

Mrs. McGinty, Mrs. Cole and Mrs. McCabe Beaten in Finals.

Helen Dettweiler Faces Mrs. Mackenzie at Congressional.

THREE women's club championships were decided yesterday.

Mrs. J. W. Beller, winner in 1933, came back to regain her title at Columbia Country Club by defeating Mrs. George B. Mcinty, 2 and 1, in the final.

Mrs. R. G. Guyer succeeded Mrs. A. E. Dedicke as Army and Navy Country Club champion by turning back Mrs. Phillip Cole, 2 and 1. Mrs. Cole had conquered Mrs. David Clark in the semifinals Wednesday in a big upset.

Mrs. W. S. Masten defeated Mrs. J. E. McCabe, 3 and 2, to win the Washington Golf and Country Club championship.

Final at Congressional.

Still a fourth championship, that at Congressional Country Club, will be settled this morning when Miss Helen Dettweiler, 20-year-old Middle Atlantic finalist, engages Mrs. Roland Mackenzie.

Held even for nine holes by Mrs. McGinty, Mrs. Beller played winning golf on the back side, taking the eleventh and twelfth to go 2 up, dropping the fifteenth and salting away the verdict with a par 4 on the seventeenth hole. Mrs. Beller was out in 46 to Mrs. McGinty's 47, and was 2 under 5s when the match ended.

Mrs. Guyer and Mrs. Cole waged a ding-dong battle from the start, with the former displaying strong finishing powers.

Mrs. Masten's victory is her first important one since she came to Washingto na few years ago from New Hampshire.

Both Miss Dettweiler and Mrs. Mackenzie won their semifinals matches by 4 and 3, after being even at the turn. Miss Dettweiler eliminated Mrs. J. F. Dowdall and Mrs. Mackenzie put out Mrs. J. J. McCarthy

Joe Louis to Fight In Bronx on Dec. 3

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 17.—Joe Louis will deliver his next package of fistic explosives on the night of December 3, when he fights in the feature match of the annual Christmas fund benefit show at the Bronx Coliseum, but it was not definitely decided tonight whether the recipient would be Paulino Uzcudun, the old Spanish wood-chopper.

The sensational Negro's managers, Julian Black and John Roxborough, visited with promoter Mike Jacobs today and agreed it would be all right for Joe to chip a few chunks off the concrete chin of Paulino or any other available opponent. The Spaniard already has accepted terms by cable for a match with Louis. It appears to be all set except for a formal announcement.

Jacobs confined himself to a statement that an opponent for Louis would be named within three or four days from one of three prospects. He refused to give the names of the other two possibilities.

GridUnderdogs Face Chance To Feast

Army, Yale and Tennessee Among Teams Given Lien on Upsets.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—They'll have to bite hard, but this week's football program offers a number of chances for underdogs to sink their teeth into favorites.

For example:

The Army Mule would make an exceptionally palatable meal for the crimson-clad Harvards. army won its first two games; Harvard has broken even in as many starts, looking none too impressive in either. The Harvards haven't lost a game in Michie Stadium, but their luck is likely to be broken when Cadet Jim Craig starts his heavy cannonading.

The Yale Bulldog may bite a piece out of the hull of Navy's dreadnaught. Both teams are riding high, wide and handsome. Yale, thanks to Sophomore Al Hessberg, came back fighting last week to nip Penn, but getting Hessberg in motion, keeping him going and stopping Navy ball carriers like Fellows and Antrim seems to be a big order for the Elis.

Brown Has Chance.

Brown has a chance to scalp the Dartmouth Indians. The series, which dates back to 1894, stands 12 victories for Dartmouth, 11 for Brown and one tie game. Dartmouth has scored more than half of its victories in the last 15 years. To win, Brown must stop the Indians' touchdown twins, Casey and Kiernan. Anticipating that is almost like expecting snow on the Fourth of July.

Columbia's Lions will try to keep Penn's varsity on a victory-starved diet for another week. This always is a big game on Lou Little's calendar. He likes to win on his own stamping ground. Columbia's chances depend to a great extent on Full Back Al Barabas and the ability of the Lion's low and hard-charging line to charge low and hard for 60 minutes. Warwick, Kurlish and Murray are Penn's big threats.

Hope to Turn Tables.

Notre Dame hopes to turn the tables on Pitt. The Irish have plenty of opposition for the independents' leadership, but a triumph over Sutherland's Panthers would just about put them where they think they ought to be—in front. Fullback Frank Patrick has accounted for more than half of Pitt's total of 73 points so far and he seems to gain momentum with each game. Shakespeare, Layden and Cardieo are capable of going places.

Can Tulane's Green Wave roll back Minnesota? It's highly improbable, but Minnesota, without George Roscoe, appears handicapped. The Gophers, however, will have Roscoe and he was too hot for Nebraska's Cornhuskers to handle last Saturday. After being humbled by Auburn, 10-0, Tulane is hungry for big game.

To Meet California.

Santa Clara's Broncos will try roping California's Golden Bears. There's no reason why they should, other than the fact the football situation on the Pacific Coast has been topsy-turvy. So far none of four teams has been able to stop Ken Cotton and Perry Thomas effectively, and it's likely they5ll find their way against Santa Clara, too.

"The Haig" Bids for Sixth U. S. Pro Title

Walter Hagen, five times winner of the Professional Golf Association tournament, attracts his usual throng of gallery members as he swings into action at Oklahoma City. His 67 in the morning round led the field at that point. Hagen won his last P. G. A. crown in 1927.

10 Schools Vie In State Race In Virginia

Special Dispatch to The Post.

UNIVERSITY, Va., Oct. 17.—Ten Virginia high schools will swing into action tomorrow and Saturday in the third round of the race for the State football championship.

In tomorrow's contests, John Marshall, Richmond, will be favored to register its third straight victory over a supposedly weaker Woodrow Wilson eleven at Portsmouth, while Thomas Jefferson's strong squad, also of Richmond, will be host to the twice-defeated Hampton team.

Lane High, Charlottesville's defending champions, will offer George Washington, Danville, its first league competition Saturday at Charlottesville, and at the same time, another George Washington team from Alexandria will appear against Newport News at Newport News. Glass, of Lynchburg, will move to Salem Saturday to take on Andrew Lewis in the remaining conference engagement.

Petersburg, after two crushing league victories, will play Hopewell in a non-conference meeting Saturday at Petersburg, and Jefferson, Roanoke, will entertain a Class B foe in Clifton Forge. Non-conference games also will be played by Maury, Norfolk, and Washington-Lee, Clarendon.

Allegany Soccer Team Trimmed by Beall High

Cumberland, Md., Oct. 17.—Allegany High School's soccer team suffered its first defeat of the season and had its goal line crossed for the first time in five games when Beall High School booters, of Frostburg, took its measure at Campobello, 5 to 0.

Coach Agnes Howatt's Beall fieldball team made it a clean sweep for Frostburg by taken the second game, 10 to 9.

Cadets-Terps Game Is Seen Wide Open

Special Dispatch to The Post.

LEXINGTON, Va., Oct. 17.—Coach Bill Raftery's V. M. I. Cadets should show an improved rushing attack, judging from the care with which Raftery and Line Coach Ed Hess have tinkered with the Cadet machine in preparation for the home-coming clash with Maryland Saturday. Faulty timing and blocking in the Richmond game forced V. M. I. to register its main gains through the air.

Reports from College Park indicate that the Terrapins profited by their loss to North Carolina also, and both teams will be set to get back in the winning column. A wide-open game, with Billy Roberson heaving the ball for V. M. I., and Bill Guckeyson doing most of the tossing for the Terrapins, is in prospect.

Two players who were on the bench last week may be called into action for V. M. I. Al Fiedler, 192-pound sophomore guard, is in better shape after resting an injury suffered in scrimmage just as the season opened. Ralph Tetzlaff was hurt at the same time, but, unlike Fiedler, he has seen no service this season.

McKnight and Feary In Fight Card Feature

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., Oct. 17.—"Jiggs" McKnight will meet Willie Feary, lightweight champion of the District of Columbia tomorrow night in the Devon Club's amateur show at the Piedmont K. of P. Armory.

Two other matches that should rival the main bout are those between Lou Gevinson, former amateur featherweight champion of the District of Columbia, and Bill Niland, South Atlantic A. A. U. champion, of Cumberland, and Bob Buckley, of Washington, D. C., and "Scotty" Hiffle, 175 pounder of the Zan A. C., of Morgantown, W. Va.

Terrors' Hopes Are Hurt by Injuries

Special Dispatch to The Post.

WESTMINSTER, Md., Oct. 17.—Western Maryland's hopes for its first major football victory of the 1935 season were somewhat dimmed tonight when Head Coach Charles Havens announced the starting line-up for Saturday. Yankee Benjamin, the sensational sophomore end, is not in the starting line-up. He is still stiff from the punishment he took in the gruelling game at Penn State last week.

In place of Benjamin will be Jim Woodbury, veteran utility man, who has served the Terrors well at end and in the back field. He has started each of the previous games as left half, doing the blocking.

Bull Draper, fully recovered from early season injuries, will be at left half. He is another veteran.

Another change in the line-up has been made at left tackle. Red Balish, who has outplayed all the other tackles throughout this week's hard practice sessions, has grabbed the job away from Tom Pontecorvo, the heavyweight boxing champion.

These two changes make little difference in the average weight of the Terror line. Balish is 12 pounds lighter than Pontecorvo, but Woodbury makes up for it. He weighs 185 to Benjamin's 171.

Long Passing Sessions.

The Terrors have been through some long passing sessions this week, but with Benjamin out of the line-up the Western Maryland chances to score by the air route are somewhat diminished, as Benjamin is one of the best pass receivers the Terrors ever have had.

Four of the forwards, playing side by side, are sophomores. Balish at left tackle, Ortenzi at left guard, Rieth at center and McPherson at right guard, have never faced Bucknell.

Rowing Tryouts For Olympics Set

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 17.—The American Olympic rowing committee today awarded the rowing try-outs for the 1936 Olympic games to Lake Cornegie at Princeton, N. J. The trials will be held July 2-4.

The July dates were selected in order to give college eights an opportunity to train for the 2,000-meter trials, approximately a mile and one-quarter, after participating in the 4-mile Poughkeepsie regatta June 22 and the 4-mile intercollegiate race between Harvard and Yale at New London, Conn.,

Colt and Filly Battle It Out In Stretch

Daily Double Pays $67; Quick Verdict Wins in Steeplechase.

placed to the hard drive that was to send him up to the leading filly.

Despite the fact that Sablin, the favorite, was on the rear end of the daily double combination, the pouular twin bet paid a $67.20 mutuel. King Bee, a 5-to-1 shot, started the ball rolling for the lucky bettors.

King Bee, a first-time starter owned and operated by W. J. Hirsch, made show of his field to graduate from the maiden ranks at a $12.30 mutuel. Far back as the field of 12 galloped along the back stretch, King Bee went to the outside of the leaders in the stretch and won easily. Old Ironsides, the favorite, and Careless Knight fough tfor the lead from the start, and the first named won second money.

Steeplechasing for the day resulted in a victory for uick Verdict over Ridian, the public choice, with Spinach third. Six started and four finished, Clonard and Balabech falling at the fourth fence while leading the flock. Ridian and Spinach battled for the lead during the last swing around, but Quick Verdict came with a rush going to the next to the last jump and drew out. The winning mutuel was $10.80.

Sablin, owned by Frank Hayes, the mayor of Bridgeport, Conn., won for the favorite players in the third race at a $5.20 mutuel. Jockey C. Reid held the Display gelding off the pace of Dancing Doll until reaching the stretch and then turned him loose. He drew out gradually approaching the finish. Dancing Doll was second and Mah Grant third.

Speed Stays on Top.

The Vanderbilt Stable won a race and lost a horse in the fourth event. Speed, in the familiar cerise and white, bounced to the wire a half length ahead of E. R. Bradley's Bootless to pay a $9.80 mutuel. Third in the eight horse field was Termination. Speed was claimed.

The substitute race, the fifth, brought a victory to Mrs. W. M. Jeffords by the medium of a closing rush of Good Visibility. Handled by Jockey Rosengarten, the Mars filly came from twelfth position to win going away in a fast stretch move. Lady Carrot finished gamely to be second, ahead of Still Alarm, a favorite at better than 4-1. Good Visibility paid $8.

Play Brook ran away with another race in the seventh, leading from flag-fall to finish, to have a length margin over Distracting. Petee Blue was a well-beaten third. Play Brook backers collected $9.60.

The day's finale went to Flying Dere with the greatest of ease. Four lengths behind, Sun Abbot won the duel for second money from Attribute. The winner was an $8.40 betting proposition.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—KING BEE, $12.30, $5.80, $4.20; OLD IRONSIDES, $4.10, $2.90; CARELESS KNIGHT, $3.60.

KING BEE outrun for the first half-mile, improved his position on the outside, came with belated speed after reaching the home stretch, and was going away after displacing the leaders inside the closing furlongs. OLD IRONSIDES had a lot taken out of him racing CARELESS KNIGHT into submission, and he weakened after reaching the home stretch. CARELESS KNIGHT was under severe pressure from the beginning. He weakened when the real issue came. SIR ROLLIE came to the outside to gain a slight lead in the last furlong, but tired suddenly nearing the finish. APPLE TODDY went evenly. CUSTER could not engage the leaders. DOCTORS GIFT was outrun and passed tiring horses. BROWN DAVID was well up early and had no mishaps. IDENTICAL was unable to enter contention.

SECOND RACE—About two miles. Steeplechase. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:06. Off at 2:06. Winner, J. R. Macomber's br. g. (5), by Justice F.—Fast Time. Trained by W. A. Harris. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 3:55 (14 jumps).

Two-dollar mutuels paid—QUICK VERDICT, $10.80, $4.00, $2.50; RIDIAN, $3.00, $2.50; SPINACH, $2.80.

QUICK VERDICT, restrained back of the leaders for the first mile and fencing in good fashion, responded willingly when placed to a drive, secured racing room on the inside of the leaders when reaching the home stretch, wore RIDIAN down coming to the final fence, and was under severe urging at the end. RIDIAN took an early lead when BALABEACH and CLONARD became eliminated, withstood tenacious efforts from SPINACH, but could not withstand the winner. SPINACH drew on even terms with RIDIAN at the tenth fence, offered stout opposition, but weakened in the stretch drive. GREATOREX was outrun. BALABEACH refused in front of the fourth jump and interfered with CLONARD, who fell at the same fence.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $900; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from stall gates in chute. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:40. Off at 2:42. Winner, F. Hayes' b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SABLIN, $5.20, $3.20, $2.20; DANCING DOLL, $3.50, $2.50; MAH GRANT, $2.30.

SABLIN, rated in close attendance of DANCING DOLL in the first three furlongs, assumed command midway of the turn, but had to be kept under steady pressure until the end. DANCING DOLL stoutly ridden from the beginning, continued with good courage after being overtaken. MAH GRANT came through on the inside entering the home stretch and closed full of run. MARSON could not improve his position at any stage. ITALIAN HARRY and the others were held perfectly safe.

THE DAILY DOUBLE (first and third races) PAID—$67.20.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. The Tangier. Purse, $900; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall gates in chute. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:11. Off at 3:15½. Winner, C. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SPEED, $9.80, $5.40, $4.90; BOOTLESS, $8.10, $5.40; TERMINATION, $5.90.

SPEED sprinted clear midway of the back stretch, shook off MY KIN, responded to severe pressure and outstayed BOOTLESS. Latter, forced to race wide in the first three furlongs, reached contention midway of the turn, then came courageously under a strong drive through the stretch. TERMINATION, slower than usual to gain its best stride, responded to punishment and closed gamely. LOOKABOUT, away well and forwardly placed after the start, dropped back when reaching the turn, then failed to rally. TROUPER, a slow beginner, was unable to threaten. MY KIN had nice speed for the first half-mile, then stopped. ABSCONDER could not stay.

FIFTH RACE—(Substitute)—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $900; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:45. Off at 3:49. Winner, Mrs. W. M. Jeffords' b. f. (2), by Mars—Pretty Day. Trained by P. M. Burch. Value to winner, $675; second, $125; third, $75; fourth, $25. Time, 0:24, 0:48 1-5, 1:15, 1:41 1-5, 1:46 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GOOD VISIBILITY, $8.00, $5.30, $3.80; LADY CARROT, $8.00, $4.10; STILL ALARM, $4.30.

GOOD VISIBILITY, a slow beginner, settled in her stride after going six furlongs, weaved her way between horses to enter contention at the stretch turn, then closing gamely, was up nearing the finish. LADY CARROT, prominent from the start and saving much ground, challensed strongly in the last five-sixteenths and came courageously in the closing drive. STILL ALARM, shuffled back going to the first turn, bothered her position steadily and finished with good energy. MAUVE DECADE, a keen factor from the start, raced ATHOLTON into defeat to gain a slight lead, but could not rally enough to stay when the real test came. BULLFINCH raced well placed and showed a good effort. MASKED BELLE was unable to enter contention. SIT OUT tired as did ATHOLTON. ENERGETIC LADY broke in a tangle and was never prominent. MUST BE stopped.

SIXTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. The Crisfield. Purse, $1,000; allowances. For 3-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:17. Off at 4:18½. Winner, Shandon Farm's ch. c. (3), by Display—Snowy. Trained by J. J. Greeley. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 1-5, 0:47 3-5, 1:13, 1:39 3-5, 1:44 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—OFFICIAL, $11.00, $5.20, $3.50; JUDY O'GRADY, $3.30, $2.70; CROSS RUFF, $5.30.

OFFICIAL, nicely handled, was taken under reserve for the first six furlongs, gained stoutly when put to a drive, joined JUDY O'GRADY when reaching the home stretch, then holding on tenaciously, was up in the last few strides. JUDY O'GRADY reared and struck the overhead beams on the starting machine before the start, broke in tight quarters and raced wide at the first turn. She ran down LAST BOAT and SCOTCH BUN when reaching the final turn, saved ground and fought it out stubbornly when collared. CROSS RUFF improved his position gradually and was making up ground at the finish. CHESHIRE closed stoutly after trailing his field. LAST BOAT and SCOTCH BUN were made too much use of early and they tired. BEST BID showed a dull performance.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:46. Off at 4:47½. Winner, C. McCarthy's b. g. (3), by Bookbinder—Snakebite. Trained by P. Krieger. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:24 3-5, 0:48 4-5, 1:14, 1:40, 1:47 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PLAYBOOK, $9.60, $4.50, $3.60; DISTRACTING, $4.60, $3.90; PETEE BLUE, $7.20.

PLAYBOOK opened up a commanding lead after going five furlongs, saved ground all the way and had speed in reserve at the end. DISTRACTING secured racing room on the inside entering the back stretch, went into contention willingly and closed gamely when hard urged. PETEE BLUE, kept under urging from the beginning, held on gamely when placed to a hard drive in the last five-sixteenths. SPARKY was hard ridden from the start and had no mishaps. RAMUS was in close quarters in the final drive. ROSS could not reach a contending position. BENDER FIRST stopped after six furlongs.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:16. Off at 5:16½. Winner, Frank Hayes' b. m. (5), by Flying Ebony—Murial Vonder. Trained by P. E. Fitzgerald. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:24, 0:48, 1:14 3-5, 1:40 2-5, 1:54.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—FLYING DERE, $8.40, $5.10, $3.60; SUN ABBOT, $5.10, $3.80; ATTRIBUTE, $4.70.

FLYING DERE, showing vastly improved form and having much more speed than in her last two races, moved into a clear lead midway of the back stretch, then held away to win hard held. SUN ABBOT entered contention swiftly when reaching the final turn, but could not menace the winner in the final drive. ATTRIBUTE, slow to get into his best stride, worked his way up on the outside and came willingly under a strong drive at the end. POTION gained stoutly from a slow beginning, but was held safe in the late stages. STEALINGAWAY was under severe pressure for the entire trip. LODORUS weakened after moving up strongly at the final bend. CAPABLANCA was not good enough. WORTHINGTON stopped.

Laurel Race Track, Oct. 17.

Dear Al:

There seems to be a plan here to wean the public from the daily double. At least, the track seems to be sneaking up the closing time on the windows at which the twin wager is bet. While there have been numerous complaints about the betting shutting down at 1:15, long lines were turned away today at 1:10. I take it that the track would much rather do away with the "double" but doesn't want to erase it in the middle of the meeting. Perhaps officials are not satisfied with the amount played. Most of the customers buy one or two tickets and let it go at that. But there is no question about its popularity. I believe that the daily double has made thousands of the race tracks at a time when they needed new faces and "fresh money." The public gets little enough consideration around any Maryland race track. Just because the double doesn't fit in very well with the operation of the plant should be no excuse for its elimination. Right now the customer is getting no music, a slow display of the odds, and, for the most part, cheap horses at no reduction in prices. But maybe it's like I heard a race official say some time ago, "Why give them a $400 daily double? The money don't go back into the machines. The winners use the money to pay bills and buy cars."

First race—Valiant Fox's last race was a third to Ceaseless and Lookabout and he was closing gamely. Appears ready to graduate at this longer route. I'm tossing out Counter Pass' last. Previous to that the filly was second after a good effort. Giant Killer for the show.

Second race—Little Woman won her first race here by a city block and then lost in mediocre time after being rushed to pieces. A rating ride in this company is all she needs, as she takes off weight. Capstan could not handle the mare the first time they met. Clifton's Queen did excellently last out.

Third race—Veritas drops two pounds off a last race that was good. Finished second and was going strongly at the end. A good ride should bring a set of brackets in this company. Red Label and Dixie Princess to take care of the others.

Fourth race—Fluton, a winner at Havre de Grace and New York within the last month, is a speedy filly. She has worked well since returning to Maryland and I'm going to string along. My Colin and James City are a close fit. They battled to a close decision in their last. Highpool ran against the rail all the way in his most recent effort. Might surprise.

Fifth race—Steward raced in behind horses last out and from where I sat it looked as if his rider did not seem to be taking the race seriously. Will have Marcella Miss to handle. City Slicker might awake any day.

Sixth race—Snow Fox has worked better than anything this race has to offer. Breaks from the outside here and has the speed to make the most of the position. I'm going to take my chances. Redley and Thirteen Stars for the place and show.

Seventh race—Hut's last is being discarded in my book. This one is fit and ready. Clocker Mike tells me. Occidental closes fast in sprints and might appreciate a test at this route. Bread King outran one field at a long route and might have to be caught here.

Eighth race—High Flag ran a nice second last out but could not match Kurdair's closing rush. Se

SEC Reveals General Motors Stock Bonuses

Twelve Officials Receive Shares Valued at $376,859.

Twelve General Motors Corporation officials, it was disclosed yesterday, hold stock in the company valued at $30,287,685 and have received stock bonuses or accruals amounting to $376,859, according to the Associated Press.

Data showing those facts were released by the securities commission. Reports covering other officials, including Alfred P. Sloan and top executives, are expected later.

The bonuses and accruals were for varying periods in 1934 and 1935. Eight officials received direct bonuses of 2,869 shares of common stock, with a recent total market value of $140,581.

All 12 received 4,822 shares, valued at $236,278, in so-called accruals. These shares were not transferred directly to the officials but to the General Motors Management Corporation, in which the officials own large blocks of stock.

The following table gives prorata accruals, bonuses, stockholdings and purchases by the 12 officials:

Follow Company Plan.

New York, Oct. 17 (AP).—Payments of $376,859 to executives of General Motors Corporation through stock bonuses or accruals in 1934 and 1935, as disclosed today by the Securities Commission, were made under company plans in operation for several years.

During 1934 the corporation paid $3,677,754 in an employes bonus and to the General Motors Management Corporation, a type of investment trust for G. M. C. executives. The previous year, $2,736,011 was paid out.

Under the "bonus plan" and the "management plan" there were 1,534 executives who received supplemental compensation in 1934, including 200 persons who participated in the latter plan and also were eligible for payments under the "bonus plan."

The maximum received by any individual, it was stated by the corporation, did not exceed 3 per cent of the total fund available in 1934. Some type of bonus award, revised for time to time, has been in effect since 1918, it was shown in the G. M. C. annual report.

Gold, Balances, Reach New Peak

The weekly Federal Reserve Bank statement reported yesterday that member bank reserve balances rose $204,000,000 during the week ended October 16 to the unprecedented peak of $5,534,000,000. This figure—$1,538,000,000 greater than last year—is about $2,910,000,000 in excess of legal requirements, the statement said.

The increase was brought about by imports of $121,000,000 in gold during the week which brought total stocks to $9,584,000,000, also a new high level.

Contributing also was a transfer of Treasury cash amounting to $54,000,000 which was moved from the reserve banks to other depositories.

Treasury Offers $100,000,000 Bills

The Secretary of the Treasury gives notice that tenders are invited for two series of Treasury bills to the aggregate amount of $100,000,000, or thereabouts. One series will be 145-day bills and the other series will be 273-day bills. Both series will be sold on a discount basis to the highest bidders.

Tenders will be received at the Federal Reserve Bank or branches up to 2 p. m. Monday, October 21. Tenders will not be received at the Treasury Department, Washington.

Brokers' Loans Decrease.

Loans on securities to brokers and dealers held by weekly reporting member banks in New York City amounted to $818,000,000 during the week ended October 16, a decrease of $7,000,000 for the week.

Gen. Electric Sales Climb 23 Per Cent

New York, Oct. 17 (AP).—The General Electric Co. reports a 23 per cent increase in net sales in the first nine months of this year compared with the same period of 1934 and a gain of 46.9 per cent in profits available for dividends. Sales for the nine months were $149,173,275 compared with $121,735,122 last year. Profits were equal to 60 cents a common share, compared with 41 cents in 1934.

Freight Traffic Now Heaviest In Four Years

Loading and Revenues Are Likely to Continue Upward Trend.

Indications that railroad freight traffic last week reached a new high level for the year and the highest point for any week since the one ended October 31, 1931, are confirmed by estimates of carloadings for the week of October 12.

The present outlook for traffic, moreover, indicates that over the balance of the year carloadings and gross rail revenues are likely to overtake the 1931 record, on a comparable seasonal basis, and thus run at the highest late autumn level since 1930. A similar trend is possible in rail earnings over the balance of the year.

The sharp upturn in traffic recently has also brought such a wide expansion in freight car requirements that many railroads and the large car leasing companies are experiencing difficulties in supplying equipment for current shipments, in this connection, Iron Age reports.

This development has led to more optimism concerning the resumption of large-scale equipment purchases by the railroads than has existed for sometime. On the other hand, while conceding the difficulties being encountered in meeting the current demand for certain types of equipment, most railroad officials deny that there is an actual shortage of equipment.

Furthermore, the fact that the usual year-end seasonal decline in traffic will get under way shortly, combined with the natural inclination to conserve expenditures in defense of 1935 income accounts, is a deterrent to new equipment commitments at this time.

Bank Clearings 20.6% Higher, ContinueClimb

Detroit Leads 22 Cities With Week's Gain of 29.4%.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 17. — Another substantial increase in bank clearings for the last week over the corresponding periods last year and 1933 was reported today by Dun & Bradstreet.

The total for the 22 leading cities in the United States for the week ended Wednesday, October 16, was $4,968,034,000, against $4,188,838,000 a year ago, an increase of 20.6 per cent. For the preceding week, the advance was 25.0 per cent. At New York City clearings were $3,168,372,000, an increase of 25.5 per cent over the amount reported last year, while the aggregate for centers outside of New York City of $1,799,662,000 was 12.9 per cent higher.

The total for the cities outside of New York was above that reported for the preceding week. At a number of important points, clearings covered only five days, both this year and last. The total for this year was less than that for the preceding week by $56,994,000, whereas for the same two weeks a year ago, there was an increase of $97,219,000.

Large New York Gains.

The gain continued large at New York City. The increase has been especially significant for some time past at Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Detroit. Other cities reporting a substantially higher amount were Chicago, Cleveland, Minneapolis, Louisville, Kansas City, Dallas, San Francisco and Portland. Clearings at Chicago were $253,900,000 against $228,400,000 last year, an increase of 11.2 per cent.

Figures at leading centers, showing increases and decreases as compared with those of a year ago, are printed herewith; also daily bank clearings for the year to date:

Highlights and Background Of Financial News and Trends

Speculative Favorites Buoyant in Narrow and Irregular Stock List—Wheat Prices Rebound—Bonds Soften—Exchanges Steady.

By Carlton A. Shively.

New York, Oct. 17.—Financial markets were less sure of their course and with a turnover of only about 1,600,000 shares the stock session was one of narrow and mixed price movements. A considerable number of stocks managed to reach new high prices, nevertheless, and pronounced weakness was not uncovered. Government bonds sagged a little. Grains reversed their trend and hardened. December wheat closed 1¾ cents higher at 102¼ cents a bushel.

Irregularity in stock prices was largely obscured for the ticker tape watcher by the steadiness of recent pool favorites, and the onrush of others which now have the plan.

The market leaders for strength were Western Union, hitting 60 for four days of consecutive gain of about 3 points a day, and Schenley, which also reached a new high price. That spectacle encouraged others in the last hour, and National Distillers, Chrysler and Greyhound firmed a bit.

Irregularly higher prices were paid for oil, utility, motor accessory, chemical, steel and railroad shares. The day was largely one of backing and filling and the price movement was the narrowest seen in some time. Gains and losses were evenly distributed in the metal, rail equipment and food groups. Weakness was the rule among the rubbers, mail orders and merchandising shares.

Packard at New High.

In the low-priced group the dominant note was struck by Packard. A new high price for the year was reached on a fractional gain. General Motors held around its previous closing price. Packing company shares were quoted higher, with exceptional activity in Wilson. Among the stocks to gain 1 to 3 points were Acme Steel, Barker Brothers preferred, Caterpillar, Clark Equipment, Deere, Food Machinery, Marlin, Rockwell, McCall, Coca-Cola, Owens Glass, Union Bag, U. S. Gypsum and Spicer. Steel was steady.

War news was more of a factor in some sections of the markets that it has been recently. The dispute between England and France, while perhaps not alarming at the moment, was serious enough to dampen the market's ardor for government bonds. Their prices were rather heavy, lacking also perhaps as much Treasury support as they had before the conversion period was over. Another factor that has not exactly lifted Government bond prices had been the publication of the deficit for the fiscal year to date. The new high record of spending has dissipated all the good that may by any chance have come from the President's recent promise of a cut in the deficit.

Taxation a Specter.

While such considerations have hurt bonds, their influence on stocks has been less harmful. The rise of the slogan, "Inflation or repudiation!" isn't frightening the growing body of speculators coming in the stock market for quick and big profits. They hope it will be inflation first, but understand that repudiation will mean much the same thing in the long run. All that restrains enthusiasm for stocks at this time is the specter of higher taxation and the knowledge that actual corporation earnings are more modest than some of the pool manipulations in the shares.

In the foreign exchanges sterling continued to gain, rather in spite of the war news, and, according to London opinion, partly because of this country's sale of dollars in exchange for silver. That metal continues to roll into vaults here for no good purpose. Gold currencies were steady, and gold exports from Europe have fallen. The British stabilization fund probably has had less need of selling francs and shipping gold to the Bank of France in order to stabilize the sterling rate. This week the Bank of France reported another rise in the metal.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

For further proof address the author, inclosing a stamped envelope for reply. Reg. U. S. Pat Off.

SULPHUR, a solid at ordinary temperatures, melts at from 112 to 119 degrees, Centigrade, into a clear yellow fluid. If, however, this molten sulphur is still further heated to about 250 degrees, it thickens again, becoming dark and almost solid. Application of more heat turns it clear and limpid again at 300 degrees. Sulphur, then, first melts, then solidifies, then melts again as more heat is applied. At 448 degrees it boils, forming a yellow vapor.

Robert Thomas, mystery man of the Windham County jail of Brooklyn, Conn., was sentenced to a short jail term there ten years ago on a charge of vagrancy. Well liked, useful, and apparently quite contented, he made arrangements to stay on after his term was up, living in the jail and working there for his meals, clothes, and a small monthly allowance.

Although he never talked of his past or his family, occasional slips in his conversations led officers to believe that he came from a good family, and was a man of fair education. The name he gave was probably fictitious. Just why a man would so willingly call a county jail his home for ten years, no one could say. The mystery now is a closed one, for not long ago Robert Thomas died.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY George Is Resigned to Honesty By Harry J. Tuthill

Yes, here's my ad.
Found. Pocketbook. On State street. Apply Mrs. George Bungle.
I still think we ought to be very broad-minded about accepting a reward.
Those diamonds! The will! That trick map on the back of it! According to my figures, if we'd accept say, only five per cent of what that stuff is worth, we'd get..
Let me check those figures again.
There's the phone.

Hello! Yes, Mrs. George Bungle. Yes, a pocketbook... yes, green... yes, a brown strap. yes. yes...yes.
Who? The owner? My word, I just knew this would happen.
My stars! How excited that man is. Said he'd be here in a few minutes, and hung up on me.
Well, after all, honesty is the best policy. Our conscience is clear. If we get a reward, it will be all right, and if we don't get one... well, we'll see about that.

Lutherans to Discuss Men's Organization

Planning to launch a movement to unite Lutherans of the several synods into a single organization, men representing all Lutheran churches in Washington will gather at a mass meeting at 8 p. m. today in Atonement Lutheran Church, North Capitol street and Rhode Island avenue.

The Rev. Carl C. Rasmussen, pastor of Luther Place Memorial Church, and the Rev. J. Frederick Wenchel, pastor of Christ Lutheran Church, will be speakers.

The immediate objective is the organization of a Lutheran Men's Society of the District of Columbia.

Drama, Spaking Classes To Be Formed at Center

Public classes in drama and speaking will be organized tonight at 7:45 o'clock at the Hine Junior High School branch of Southeast Community Center, Seventh and C streets southwest. Mrs. M. W. Davis, community secretary; Mrs. Marie Moore Forrest and Miss Mary Olive O'Connell will be in charge of the groups.

Voice and public speaking will be studied every Friday from 7:45 to 8.30 p. m., followed by play rehearsals from 8:30 to 10:30.

Socialists to Hear New York Speakers

Two speakers from New York will address the first fall meetings of the Washington section of the Socialist Labor Party at Musicians' Hall, 1105 Sixteenth street northwest.

Aaron Orange will speak tomorrow night on "Socialism or Fascism?" Next Saturday night Emil Teichert will discuss "Marxian Socialism versus the Reform United Front." The sessions, open to the public, will include question periods.

Cab Driver Held Up.

Roland Butts, 623 Second street northwest, a tlxi driver, was held up and robbed of $2.50 yesterday by a colored man who pressed a knife into his neck after hiring his cab at New Jersey avenue and L street northwest.
